Yacht club, Hingham Rotary thefts making waves

Local accountant being investigated

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

News about alleged embezzlement of hundreds of thousands of dollars in Cohasset Yacht Club's funds is causing more waves than a major nor'easter.

A letter sent by the CYC commodore to the 245 members of the 111-year-old facility nestled on the shores of Cohasset Harbor states Davenport B. "Dave" Crocker, the club's accountant and long-time resident, had been stealing from the non-profit's coffers for at least seven years.

In neighboring Hingham, police are investigating the alleged theft by the same individual from the coffers of the Hingham-Hull Rotary Club after allegations surfaced there in mid-December.

Papers obtained from Hingham District Court state Crocker, the Rotary club's treasurer, whose business is Davenport B. Crocker Inc. Accounting Services on Station Street in Hingham, admitted to rotary officials last month that he had embezzled at least $35,000 from that non-profit since August.

"Based on information received, a criminal investigation has been initiated into a possible larceny of funds from the Cohasset Yacht Club."

— Police Chief James Hussey

No charges have been filed yet in either the Cohasset or Hingham case. On the advice of his attorney, Crocker refused to comment on the situation. He also refused to provide the name of his lawyer but did say the yacht club was under contract not to discuss the matter.

There's little doubt the two-page CYC epistle — detailing how the alleged theft of about $427,000 was discovered and what the CYC planned to do about it — is causing an uproar. A number of yacht club members are saying privately they are upset about the apparent lack of oversight of CYC funds and the "deal" struck with Crocker that gets the club's money back in exchange for not pursuing or initiating criminal proceedings.

If the tenor of the calls is a gauge then the CYC informational meeting for club membership on the matter slated for last night (Thursday, Jan. 5) after the Mariner went to press at the Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island should have been a raucous affair.

One source said "it seems like the old-boy network is in full effect in Cohasset." Another bemoaned how "white collar crime is handled in Cohasset."

Cohasset police, however, don't appear to be taking the same tact as the yacht club leadership. "Based on information received, a criminal investigation

After 21 years, the Very Rev. E. Clifford "Cliff" Cutler is leaving St. Stephen's this month to take the helm of a church in Philadelphia.

St. Stephen's pastor returning to his roots

Will lead parish in Philadelphia

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When the Very Rev. E. Clifford Cutler talks about home, it's hard to believe he doesn't mean Cohasset.

But the fact is the pastor of St. Stephen's Church grew up in the Philadelphia area, a location that is still very close to his heart.

So as it happened, when a church in Philadelphia contacted him last summer about the possibility of leading its congregation — it was an opportunity that Cutler thought he should take a look at. Now Cutler, 56, who has been at St. Stephen's for some 21 years, is literally coming full circle.

He's leaving Cohasset — a town he has grown to love and where he raised his family — to return to his roots and a chance to build another parish before he reaches retirement age in a decade or so.

During an interview this week, Cutler, who is affectionately known as "Cliff," talked about recent improvements to St. Stephen's, a town landmark, with immense pride. A memorial garden is taking shape and a new elevator will soon be installed to make the levels between the church and parish house accessible to all. This is going on amid other construction to ensure the venerable structure serves its flock well into the 21st century and beyond.

"I want to thank everyone in the parish who helped me grow and thank the people of Cohasset."

— The Very Rev. E. Clifford Cutler

During the interview, melodic sounds from music lessons being given upstairs in the parish house traveled down the staircase and through the hallways to the sitting room near Cutler's office. With its world-class carillon and 3,000-pipe organ, St. Stephen's tradition is firmly anchored in music.

St. Stephen's, an Episcopal church, is also a special place with a strong sense of history. Cutler has never lost sight of that; he has been at the helm of the church during the 75th anniversary of the carillon and a few years later, the centennial of the church itself, both of which were celebrations that drew folks from the entire town and region.

Cutler has also been a volunteer in town government, serving for many years on the drug and alcohol committee whose legacy today is Project Safeguard, a program that works with parents and children on the pressing social issues of our time. He also served as chairman of the Cohasset Fair Housing Committee in the late 1980s.

His wife, Amy, is also a familiar figure. A recent president of the Social Service League of Cohasset, she led that organization through some difficult challenges. Their sons, Evan, 23, and Seth, 20, may always call Cohasset home. Evan has an apartment in Kingston and works for a local company, Seavey Engineering. Seth is a junior at the University of St. Andrew's in Scotland.

"Evan feels as though the child should leave his parents and not the other way around," Cutler says with a smile.

The Cutlers came to Cohasset from an inner-city church in Philadelphia when Evan was only two. "We wanted to find an easier place to raise a family," he recalls. "And Amy is from Massachusetts."

So they visited Amy's home state and Cutler sent out his résumé. Cutler and St. Stephen's soon connected and the subsequent relationship helped the church grow to the 670 members it has today, one-third of whom are children.

Local seniors fail asset test

Can't qualify for affordable housing units

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset seniors looking to move into affordable housing might not find an answer in the Cook Estate project. While there will be affordable units built, seniors selling homes in town will have a hard time passing the asset tests necessary to determine who qualifies for the housing.

When Town Meeting approved allocating the money to move ahead with the Cook project in November 2005 [illegible] the conditions was that the project be built according to the guidelines set by the town's Senior [illegible] Multi-Family Residence Overlay District bylaw, passed in November 2002. Under the bylaw, 25 percent of the total units built for a project must be affordable, and must meet the affordability guidelines set by the state Department of Housing and Community Development.

During a senior housing forum held from 10 a.m. until noon Tuesday, Jan. 3, Bob Engler — a consultant hired by the town to help guide it on affordable housing matters — said although the Cook project was intended to pro-

Town Meeting start time change

Selectman Gary Vanderweil asked the board of selectmen Tuesday whether it would consider changing the start time for the Annual Town Meeting, scheduled for Saturday, April 1, from 10 a.m. to 9 a.m., and allow the meeting to run until 6 p.m. Town Manager Bill Griffin said the Annual Town Meeting has always been held at 10 a.m., and he is not sure whether the town's bylaws state it must begin at 10. He said he would research the matter and get back to the board.

Flynn, Sullivan won't seek reelection

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The board of selectmen and school committee will lose two very familiar faces this year as Michael Sullivan and Rick Flynn have decided not to seek another term.

Nomination papers for the election, scheduled for April 8, became available Tuesday, Jan. 3 and both Sullivan and Flynn said while they have enjoyed the work they have done on their respective boards, they feel it is time to encourage new members of the community to become involved and share their ideas.

Sullivan has been an active volunteer in town for the past 15 years. He served on the board of health from 1988 to 1992, prior to serving on the board of selectmen for two terms from 1992-1998. He ran for selectman again in 2000 and was reelected in 2003.

Sullivan said he hopes an open seat will encourage others to run. "We have accomplished a lot in the last 10 years," as a town, said Sullivan, noting fresh ideas can help keep the town moving in a positive direction. He said during his tenure, he saw the schools rebuilt as well as a new infrastructure built for the town. Through it all Cohasset continues to receive high-marks as being a well-run town, he said, adding he has been proud to serve.

While he will not officially be a member of the board of selectmen after the election, Sullivan said he is open to the possibility of volunteering in another capacity in the future.

"There are new zoning issues that have been brought forth," he said, referring to the new plans from the economic development committee, and he thinks the issues which have been brought up are very interesting. He said right now there are not many capital projects on the horizon, and the town's focus is on growing revenue, and that might be something he would like to become involved with.

But for now, Sullivan will spend the next few months carrying out his duties on the board of selectmen and for those looking to fill his seat, Sullivan has some advice. "You have to dedicate a fair amount of time for it, you have to have a thick skin, you have to be able to work with a team and build consensus, and there has to be something about the role that really creates enthusiasm," he said.

After the election, Flynn will have an open schedule on Thursday nights as he will no longer be required to sit in front of the school committee cameras as he has for the past six years. However, he said these last months on the board will be crucial as there are some very important items of business that need to be accomplished. "We have a budget to be put together, and I'd like to have the teachers' contract completed," he said. However, he said whomever takes his place, he knows the board will be in good hands with Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh at the helm.

Before serving on the school committee, Flynn spent six years on the advisory committee. "I was going to take time off," he joked, but soon found himself taking on the role of a school committee member.

Flynn said even without serving on the school committee he will still be very busy, but added after 12 years of service, "I'd like to stay involved (in volunteering for the community) to some degree. It's great to be involved and know what's going on," he said. However, Flynn said he hopes his absence will encourage new residents to become involved.

Flynn advised any potential successors, to be a good school committee member, they must be patient, and must realize problems cannot be solved singularly. "You can't do it by yourself, you have to work together with common goals. You don't have to love each other all the time, but you have to be willing to work as a team."

Nomination papers for the 2006 annual Town Election are available at the Town Clerk's Office at Town Hall. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, Feb. 16. At the time the Mariner went to press, incumbents John McNabb and John Beck had pulled papers to retain their seats on the water commission and sewer commission, respectively.

In order to hold an elected office, a potential candidate must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that a person is not running for office until he or she takes out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies the signatures collected on the nomination papers. Positions available for the 2006 town election include:

- Selectmen - One for three years
- School Committee - Two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - Three for three years
- Assessor - One for three years
- Board of Health - One for three years
- Cohasset Housing Authority - One for five years
- Planning Board - One for five years
- Recreation Commission - One for five years

has been initiated into a possible larceny of funds from the Cohasset Yacht Club," Police Chief James Hussey said in a press release.

"Cohasset police officials have been in contact with the leadership of the yacht club and they have indicated they will fully cooperate with investigators from the Cohasset Police Dept. and the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office."

David Traub, spokesman for District Attorney William Keating's office, confirmed the DA's office has been in contact with Cohasset Police and will be assisting them with the investigation.

Hingham Police Sgt. Michael Peraino said Hingham is working with the Plymouth County DA Tim Cruz's office in the investigation.

According to the CYC letter, the club has identified about $427,000 that Crocker, the club's accountant, took over seven years, the farthest back allowed under the bank's records retention policy.

Crocker, 69, formerly lived at a condominium complex at 100 Pond St.. He has been separated form his wife since March and currently lives in an apartment off Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A), a source said. He also owns a home in Florida. According to the CYC 2005 membership book, Crocker, the son of a noted sailor, has been a member of the yacht club since 1936, the year he was born.

In a telephone interview, CYC Commodore F. Wisner Murray said "all matters between the parties have been settled." He referred any further comment to the club's attorney, Joel Beckman.

Hingham-Hull Rotary president Franklyn Schafer, who said Crocker intends to make full restitution, said Hingham police have asked the club not to comment pending their investigation. But he did say "the public should be assured the Rotary is fine and intends to be as much a part of the community as it always has been."

Hingham police obtained a search warrant for Crocker's office last month and confiscated all the computers and related equipment and several checks.

According to court papers, Hingham Police Capt. Taylor Mills, who is a member of the Rotary, told detective Gerald McInnis what he had heard about the alleged theft. McInnis subsequently met with Schafer, the Rotary president, and two other Rotary officials.

McInnis's affidavit for a search warrant on file at the court states on Dec. 15 Schafer went to Crocker's office to get a check for a donation and during that meeting Crocker admitted to stealing from both the Rotary and the Cohasset Yacht Club. Schafer insisted Crocker resign immediately as treasurer and from the Rotary club itself.

In the CYC letter, Commodore Murray states the discovery of the embezzlement arose over several bounced checks. Further investigation revealed Crocker had been embezzling substantial funds from the Yacht Club. Murray states when confronted with the incriminating facts, Crocker admitted he had been stealing from the club and repaid $53,314, which he initially represented as the total taken.

The CYC hired Ziner, Kennedy and Lehan to conduct a forensic review of the club's books and hired Joel Beckman, of Beckman & Paris LLP for legal advice.

In the letter, Murray states the club reached a settlement with Crocker to which the club has been repaid $200,000, and is to be paid an additional $260,000 within 18 months. The total includes the cost of the investigation and interest on the stolen funds.

"Our analysis of our legal options and Dave's (Crocker's) available assets led us to conclude that pursuing Dave through legal channels would result in delayed and uncertain recovery," Murray stated. The $260,000 due is secured by a second mortgage on the Crockers' condominium in Florida, according to the CYC letter.

"Under the settlement, the club has released Dave from all other claims and agrees not to initiate or pursue criminal proceedings," he stated.

Committee finds creative ways to boost tax revenue

Eyes loosening parking requirements

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Over the past three months, at the direction of the board of selectmen, the economic development committee has been brainstorming for ideas to boost commercial tax revenue for Cohasset. In that short time, the group has come up with a total of 20 different ways to increase the money coming into the town, some of which could come up as articles at the Annual Town Meeting.

Chairman Peter Brown, who presented the committee's recommendations Tuesday, said there are six recommendations which should be taken up first. Of those six, three are goals which should be accomplished within the next three months. He presented draft Warrant articles for five of the recommendations for the board's consideration.

"This is a lot to try to bring to the floor (of Town Meeting) in April," said selectman Michael Sullivan of the articles, but overall the board agreed the recommendations are worth carefully considering.

Brown said the most important change the committee would like to see take place is reducing the commercial parking requirement from 10 to five parking spaces per 1,000 square feet of public space in the highway, technology, and light industry business districts. The committee feels the cufrent parking requirements leave too much space unused, as parking lots are never full, and that space could be used to help encourage development, especially along Rte. 3A.

Engineer Neil Murphy attended the meeting with the committee and said in his professional opinion, "Ten per 1,000 square feet is extremely excessive. It is probably the worst parking regulation I've ever seen," adding while he thinks five spaces per 1,000 is still excessive, it is more reasonable. He said not only does the regulation dictate what can be built on the site, it impedes the addition of greenspace.

Planning board member Mike Westcott, who is an ex-officio member of the growth and development committee, said he could only speak for himself, but from a planning standpoint, he feels there are acres of unused parking in town that could be developed and therefore help increase tax revenue. He said he has had informal discussions with other members of the planning board and thinks some share his viewpoint.

Murphy added every Christmas there are at least 20 parking spaces dedicated to selling Christmas trees in the Cohasset Plaza parking lot, which in his opinion paints a very clear picture of the parking situation there.

The committee also recommended increasing building height, lot coverage, and structural building coverage in the highway, technology, and light industry business districts. Brown said the changes will allow for more creative architectural designs, and the businesses which currently exist will have an opportunity to expand.

Committee member Thom Powers said there are many people in town that have small satellite offices, but as their businesses grow, the town can no longer accommodate them. "People leave because they don't have anywhere to expand in town. We know we're not taking advantage of that," he said. By increasing the buildings the town already has, and allowing for more development, the town will be able to provide the space to fulfill that need for its residents as well as increase its commercial tax base. The town charges taxes by the square foot, and therefore larger buildings allow for more tax revenue.

Another recommendation is to approve the use of a transit oriented district (TOD) to promote commercial development in the highway, technology, and light industry business districts. With the train coming to town, the committee says it makes sense to increase the density of development and allow more mixed-use buildings near the new means of transportation. The TOD would encompass roughly one-quarter of a mile surrounding the train station, and the committee said its goal is to build more shops and services that would likely be used by train commuters, such as dry cleaning and day care.

The board of selectmen said it shared one of the committee's goals: getting the town to adopt its draft master plan. While many committees have been using the master plan as if it has been adopted, without formal approval by the planning board, its words mean nothing. Westcott said the planning board will have a final hearing on the plan soon and it will be formally adopted by the board.

"Ten per 1,000 square feet is extremely excessive. It is probably the worst parking regulation I've ever seen."
— Neil Murphy, engineer

Downtown

While many of the committee's recommendations deal with development on Rte. 3A, one specifically deals with growth downtown. There is a 45,785 square foot parcel of land located behind the Red Lion Inn in the municipal parking lot which is currently the site of the Teen Garage. The committee said there is ledge behind the building which could be blasted to allow for a new structure to be built in place of the garage. The new building could serve as a parking garage as well as a potential new site for teen activities. If this plan is carried out, it must take place sooner rather than later, as blasting will not be allowed once the train is operating.

The last of the most urgent recommendations is to hire a full-time Town Planner to help guide and manage the town's anticipated commercial and residential growth. However, Town Manager Bill Griffin said that is more a question of the funding being available in the budget.

Other recommendations the board would like to see carried out in the future include:

- Support a planning board article to rezone the downtown village district to encourage mixed-use development.
- Complete traffic studies including the synchronization of traffic signals on 3A from Hingham to Scituate.
- Fund and execute a downtown village design study and set guidelines to maximize access, open space, commercial development, parking, housing, and preservation.
- Determine what town-owned parcels of land are available for sale/lease for commercial development in the context of the draft master plan.
- Identify and evaluate all undeveloped and underdeveloped privately owned land in all commercial districts in the context of the draft master plan.
- Create a non-profit economic development entity to help promote and execute the growth and development committee recommendations and develop marketing programs and events to prudently increase tourism.
- Evaluate elastic mooring proposal to determine if additional moorings can be added to Cohasset Harbor thus adding tax revenue and mooring fees.
- Evaluate wind turbine feasibility.
- Investigate and study available options to earn state grants.
- Help establish an official funded, non-profit Economic Development Corporation to help the committee continue its work to assist in helping promote sound economic development.
- Evaluate and implement an improved and more transparent process of communication and coordination among Cohasset boards, authorities, the town manager and board of selectmen.
- Pursue funding for the construction of a pedestrian walkway from the new train station to the village.
- Conduct a downtown business survey.
- Instruct the committee to engage with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and work together to promote the town's business interests.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said he thought the group did a great job coming forth with 20 recommendations in such a short period of time. "I think the economic development committee should stay in existence," he said, although the selectmen had originally only intended to make the positions three-month appointments. Vanderweil said unless there is a driving force behind the group's ideas, nothing will get done, and he would like to see the group continue its good work until the end of this year.

The board of selectmen said it would take the recommendations under advisement. Articles for Town Meeting are due by Jan. 13.

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

DOONAN FAMILY

Hello Cohasset and Happy New Year to all. As the year was beginning, it was with great sadness that we all began to hear the news of the house fire that affected the wonderful Doonan family. Although all people were accounted for, they lost their beloved dog, "Lexi" along with most of their belongings and their home.

Please know that the town of Cohasset is thinking of you all during this very difficult time and we hold you in our thoughts and prayers. It is at times like these that we can all reflect and realize that for all the complaining and griping about so many little things in life, what really matters are family and friends. Life changes in a heartbeat and when it is time to group together and pick up the pieces, Cohasset does a great job. Hold this family in your everyday thoughts.

Local artist's paintings brought landscapes to life

Retrospective exhibit opens at Art Center

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Sue DeMichele's Life in Landscape found its life mainly in the coastal waterways and rocky ledges of New England. In the words of her own artist statement, she applied vigorous strokes, layering, and mark making — with her chosen media of oils and pastels — to reflect the energy she found in the magnificent landscape and interpret a moment now lost in time.

DeMichele, who lived in Cohasset, also applied her painting craft as a member of the town's South Shore Art Center community, as both a gallery artist and member of the faculty. She is remembered for the spirit of eagerness and generosity she brought to many art center activities and events up until her death from cancer at age 56 in October, 2002.

"Susan had a great love for painting landscapes and she always tried to work on-site."
— Don DeMichele

The artist left behind a prolific wealth of oil and pastel paintings as well as additional pastel and acrylic works spanning a 30-year career. Much of the best of these will go on view at the SSAC in Sue DeMichele Retrospective: A Life in Landscape, the center's first major exhibit of this year opening Friday in its main Bancroft Gallery and running through Feb. 19.

"Sue DeMichele loved life, and she loved the world around her. She looked to the landscape for inspiration and subject, and her artistic purpose was to capture and express moments of the beauty, energy, and promise of tranquility she found there," stated curators JoAnne Chittick, of Cohasset, and Penny Myles, of Hingham, in their official statement for the exhibit.

The curators' statement also describes some of the artist's favorite subjects to be featured prominently in the show. Such as, sandy dunes in Nantucket; rocky ledges, shoreline and marshes in Cohasset; islands, pines, sea and sky in coastal Maine as well as the farm DeMichele viewed from her kitchen window at her home on Jerusalem Road and the ice pond in the woods also nearby.

The show is presented to cover the full spectrum of DeMichele's work, which marginally included a handful of abstract explorations in acrylic, but mainly was influenced by the classic European Impressionism style, especially that of the artist's two favorite painters: Monet and Van Gogh. DeMichele even exerted some influence of her own during her lifetime, as demonstrated by the show's companion exhibit, Friends of Sue DeMichele, a group show featuring works by SSAC members Chittick, Kimberlee Alemian, Diana Rousseau and Patricia Gray simultaneously to display in the Center's adjoining Dillon Gallery.

"We tried to get as many views of rocky shores, water and coastal views into the exhibit as possible," said Don DeMichele, Susan's husband. "Susan had a great love for painting landscapes and she always tried to work on-site. Her goal was always to work on-site as much as possible." The DeMicheles have three children; Daniel, 31, currently of South Boston, Marni (Dolan), 27, of Weymouth, and Jamie, 25, of Seattle.

Don DeMichele ironically noted that, for such a dedicated career artist, Susan first studied art as a minor (majoring in English) when she began college at Cortland State University in New York in 1968, "because her father didn't want to pay for art school."

Sue DeMichele then moved on to Boston University and finally began full-time art studies at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in 1970. She earned her art degree from the Kansas City Art Institute in 1979 and studied privately with nationally known painters Jon Imber and Domingo Barreres.

"For two years, during late summer and early autumn, Sue and I toured the mid-coast of Maine on painting trips together," Chittick recalled. "We'd go to spots such as Tenant's Harbor, Port Clyde and Cushing. It was a great experience altogether traveling with her, one which I really learned a lot from."

Chittick added because many of the paintings to be displayed are from private collections, the Retrospective exhibit will be the last time the entire collection will be on view in one event. Some two-thirds of the total works will also be for sale, including about 50 Susan DeMichele paintings of Cohasset, Cape Cod, Maine and Nantucket available during the first weekend, Jan. 6-8. These last remaining works — unmatted, unframed and in various stages of completion — will be on display in the Manning Lobby and may only be purchased during the following times: Friday, Jan. 6, 5 - 8 p.m., Saturday, Jan. 7, 10 a.m.- 4 p.m., and Sunday, Jan 8, 12-4 p.m.

Both Chittick and Don DeMichele added that any revenues from sales will be put into an art scholarship fund either at the South Shore Art Center or Cohasset High School. "All of the paintings show the energy that Sue put into her work, and she approached her subjects and hand techniques," Don DeMichele. She had a great sense of color and wasn't afraid to use a lot of color in bold ways."

EDITORIAL

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2006 gets too far along, we still have some important 2005 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter-to-the-editor or penned a commentary to the Cohasset Mariner in 2005.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject, putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following citizens:

Bill Adams; Stephen P. Andrus; ASP (Gary and Judy Ritts); John Beck; Diane Benson; Ron Bersani; Steve Bobo; Russell Bonetti; Elaine Breslow; Richard E. T. Brooks; Barbara Buckley; Jack Buckley; Merle Brown;

The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 210 letters from 156 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year — which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy. Let us hear what you think in 2006.

Readers invited to sign up

The Cohasset Mariner is building a Readers Advisory Network of e-mail addresses so we can more frequently involve our readers in the content of the newspaper. Readers, who join the network, may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, for a digital "person on the street" interview, or for a community commentary.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the network, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. She will answer any questions that you may have. The Mariner promises to remove you immediately from the Readers Advisory Network if you request that we do.

Outraged over yacht club 'cover up'

TO THE EDITOR:

Where is the outrage?

As a former member of the Cohasset Yacht Club (1986-2003), I believe I am entitled to speak out about the apparent recently admitted embezzlement of nearly $500,000 from the Club by its former accountant!

In what appears to be an ongoing attempt to cover up this grossly unacceptable behavior, the CYC is implicitly a co-conspirator to defraud its members. Where is the outrage?

Just when we, the citizens of our town, began to hope we were beyond the many scoundrels, scandals, embezzlements and misbehaviors, Cohasset is once again embarrassed and besmirched by leaders with missing moral compasses. Where is the outrage?

Prosecutors in Norfolk County should investigate this matter to the fullest extent of the law and ask over and over again the question that Sen. Howard Baker asked during the Watergate hearings in 1973: "What did you know and when did you know it?" Where is the outrage?

How much must the citizens of Cohasset endure as we are once again the butt of jokes that show us as a town that thinks itself superior to surrounding communities. Where is the outrage?

Every person who is in a current leadership position at CYC who is complicit in accepting the supposed mea culpa pay-back scheme from the alleged embezzler should resign forthwith. Where is the outrage?

Tree pickup this weekend

TO THE EDITOR:

The Project Safeguard Committee does many things for the school to inform students about the effects of drugs and alcohol. At this time, they are in need of our help so the Middle School Student Council is having a Christmas tree drive to benefit them.

On Jan. 7 and Jan. 8 students from the Cohasset Middle School will be driven by their parents around Cohasset to pick up Christmas trees. The cost for them to pick up your tree is $15 or $10 if you're a senior citizen. Trees will be picked up either 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday or 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Sunday. All you have to do is contact the Cohasset Teen Center at (781) 383-2492 and leave a message with your name and address.

If you have a child or children in the middle school they're encouraged to help. Remind them to sign up during lunch to help. All the students are asked to do is drag the trees from the customer's yard to the road where they'll be picked up and brought to the dump. After they help, they can go to the Teen Center for pizza and other refreshments. Have their friends join, too. Have a safe and Happy New Year!

Peary caribou are endangered

TO THE EDITOR:

Unfortunately, I have a sad footnote to add to my recent article about the Peary caribou in the "On the Wild Side" column. Now that the press of a deadline is off and I have had time to research further, I learn that the Peary have been an Endangered Species since 2002-2003. It is believed 85 per cent have disappeared, and estimates of remaining Peary range from under 2,000 to about 10-15,000. To learn more, Google "Peary caribou."

King Street grade crossing not ready for prime time yet

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Well, here we are a New Year with a lots of new Greenbush related items ahead of us in 2006. First, let us say that we welcome everyone's comments about the project. We are constantly amazed at the feedback we get about our updates information presented in these pages. Thank you for your favorable comments. But, we welcome your comments both favorable and critical. We are here to help you and get the best that we can for Cohasset.

So with that said, what's in store for Cohasset? Well, the MBTA wants to get the King Street crossing finished as quickly as possible. In fact, they would like to open King Street before it is actually completed. But, we feel that opening the crossing before it is finished may not be in the Town's best interests. A substandard roadway around the King Street crossing that will deteriorate rapidly and will be tough to maintain and will not serve us well. Especially, since closing other crossings will increase the King Street traffic beyond what it normally carries. This will cause a larger problem, long term and we are meeting with the project to try and avoid future problems in this area.

We have also asked the MBTA and their contractor what their schedule is for the other crossings that will be closed for construction such as ; Spring/Pond, Pleasant and Sohier, plus North Main at the Woodside Cemetery. We are awaiting their answer and will present it here as soon as we know. Please be advised that there is a risk here as we provide schedules contingent on weather, particularly this time of year. So we all need to be aware that delays are inherently possible given the nature of the work.

As we write this, the side walls for the Rocky Lane bridge are starting to rise from their foundations. Take a look as you drive along North Main Street.

Other projects

You may be interested to know that the Town Manager has asked us to get involved in several other projects that are peripherally related to the Greenbush project or involve areas specifically funded by our MBTA Mitigation funds.

For example, part of the Cohasset Mitigation funds have been earmarked to address some of the problems associated with the James Brook watershed. By way of review, James Brook starts near Lower King Street and North Main Street at Sanctuary Pond, flows approximately parallel to N. Main Street into Town at Smith Place, where it goes underground and flows into Jacob's Meadow, behind the village area where it joins with Stewart Brook. As both brooks join in the meadow they then flow to the harbor at the Legion building and out through the Self Regulating Tide Gate (SRT). Last spring we found that the SRT was not working properly. It is designed to shut at high tide so that Jacobs Meadow does not flood. But at low tide it opens so that the waters from Jacobs Meadow can exit to the harbor. At mid tide, it is designed to be open so that salt water can flush into Jacobs Meadow and create a salt water marsh rather than a fresh water marsh.

The SRT was not adjusted properly so that there was insufficient salt water flushing into Jacobs Meadow. There is a delicate balance that needs to be achieved so that saltwater is permitted into the meadow during every tide cycle, yet flooding of the meadow is avoided. This balanced approach was dictated by the Army Corps of Engineers when the gate was commissioned by the Town in the fall of 2003. We worked with an engineering firm, the Harbor Health Committee and the DPW to make the necessary repairs to the SRT so that it now better performs its intended functions.

We have provided input to the Board of Health for their recent grant award to study pollution sources from James Brook into the harbor. We have been asked to be a part of the oversight function for this critical study, working with the Board of Health, the Harbor Health Committee, the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research, and others. While this will be a long term commitment for the Town, the smart use of these grant funds will ultimately lead to a cleaner, healthier harbor.

Background

A little over a year ago in the summer of 2004, a construction project was undertaken to improve the flow through James Brook in the area of Pleasant Street. This project simply increased the underground water carrying capacity of the James Brook culvert which in turn reduced the chance of flooding in the area between Smith Place and Pleasant Street. The box culvert under the railroad right of way was also upgraded to allow for better flow. Although when we arrived, this project was generally considered complete, there were a few small items that had been missed by the firm doing project oversight on behalf of the Town. We worked with the design engineer and the contractor to resolve these items so the project could be declared officially complete. The several major storms that the Town experienced this year caused no flooding in this area which indicates that this project has been effective so far. This project also had ties to the Revitalization Project to be discussed later.

As the Greenbush project progressed, there were some drainage issues at Lower King and North Main streets that would not be addressed by the project. A new storm-water catch basin had to be designed and built by the Town in this area. The "instant" project had to be done quickly as North Main Street was about to be resurfaced as part of a Water Department project. We obtained the services of an engineering firm for the design and then had the catch basin, pipe and manhole constructed, all within a three week time frame. Recent rain events have allowed us to observe that this drainage is working well.

Village Revitalization was a project that was designed to improve the Village area and intended to be done as the Greenbush project re-constructed the parking lot and the Pleasant Street crossing. For awhile it seemed like it would never get out of the starting blocks onto the track toward completion. Working with the Revitalization Committee, the Selectmen and engineers, we were able to help the Town simplify the project, restructure the specifications, go out to bid and get a contract awarded to start work. During November and December all of the storm drainage from Red Lion Inn to Depot Court has been replaced with new catch basins that will work properly. (This drainage is connected to the James Brook culvert mentioned earlier.)

Ledge removal

Some of the ledge has been removed at the base of St. Stephen's so that both the sidewalk and the street can be widened at this critical area, improving both pedestrian and vehicular safety. As soon as the weather breaks this spring, the drainage will be completed, the balance of the ledge will be removed, and the street, curbs and sidewalks will be replaced. All work should be wrapped up by the end of May, 2006. We are trying to work closely with the Greenbush project so that the Town parking lot can then proceed in close coordination with this work. So, by summer 2006 the village will have a vastly improved look with much better infrastructure that should serve Cohasset for years to come.

Lastly, this fall the Commonwealth of Massachusetts offered a series of grants for Transportation Oriented Development (TOD). The idea behind a TOD grant is to offer financial support for new development within close proximity of a transportation center. These projects will create better access to public transportation, or housing or commercial development that piggy back on the public transportation infrastructure. We submitted two grant requests under this program. Each of these is for the construction of sidewalk in the vicinity of the Greenbush Station. The first, is for the construction of a sidewalk from Lower King St. to Route 3A and along Route 3A to the Station. The second grant request is for sidewalk on Forest Avenue approximately from Surrey Drive to the Lower King Street/ North Main Street intersection and for sidewalk access over the new Rocky Lane Bridge from North Main Street into the Rocky Lane development. We have a meeting with the TOD grant folks at the end of this month, so we are still in contention for one or both of our grant applications. Keep your fingers crossed.

So as you can see, we are quite busy with the Greenbush project and a number of related projects. We will continue to provide you with periodic updates on any and all of these. Please stay tuned.

A preview of 2006

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The more things change the more they remain the same, as we shall see in 2006:

January – The National Security Agency places a wiretap on the telephone of Vice President Cheney to find out where he goes when he hides out. "This proves no one is above the law," says President Bush. Paris Hilton gets engaged.

February – Mitt Romney tells a Republican rally in South Carolina that being governor of Massachusetts is like being director of a zoo that's run by the inmates, denies he is running for president. Paris Hilton breaks her engagement.

March – The FBI follows tips to Dublin, London, Rome and Afghanistan in search of Whitey Bulger, finally arrests him in the booth next to the kitchen in Amhrein's Restaurant in South Boston. "Nobody thought of looking for me here," he says. Paris Hilton loses Tinker Bell, her Chihuahua.

April – Researchers discover that cigarette smoke is a cure for the dreaded Avian flu. Philip Morris retools and revises its publicity policy in the face of its new role as the good guys. Paris Hilton finds Tinker Bell.

May – Congressman Bill Delahunt strikes a deal with Fidel Castro to import Cuban rum at a discount. "My constituents are tired of using Puerto Rican and Jamaican rum in their Cuba Libras," says Delahunt. Paris Hilton gets engaged.

June – Bruins and Celtics win hockey and basketball championships and nobody notices. "I was wondering why all those lights were on at the Garden during the winter," says a neighbor from the North End. Paris Hilton breaks her engagement.

July – Tom Reilly is forced to resign as candidate for governor when it is revealed that his running mate is an undocumented immigrant who attended UMass-Amherst at an instate tuition rate. Paris Hilton feuds with Nicole.

August – Red Sox, with no players left from the World Series champions of 2004, fail to make the playoffs, fire Manager Terry Francona. Globe sportswriter Dan Shaughnessy's latest book, "The Curse of Theo Epstein," hits No. 1 on most best seller lists. Paris Hilton and Nicole make up.

September – Massachusetts Supreme Court finds an obscure phrase in the State Constitution that outlaws marriage between a man and a woman. "Just think, our founding fathers were against this all along and we didn't know it," says Chief Justice Margaret Marshall. Paris Hilton gets engaged.

October – Mitt Romney tells a Republican rally in Kansas that he was always in favor of intelligent design but those gosh darn evolutionists in Massachusetts wouldn't let him, denies he is running for president. Paris Hilton breaks her engagement.

November – Osama bin Laden is captured after an FBI wiretap intercepts a phone conversation between him and his lawyer, Ramsey Clark. ACLU calls it a clear violation of confidentiality between lawyer and client. Paris Hilton doesn't get engaged.

December – Atheist father finds he can see an ornament on a Christmas tree in his neighbor's house by standing on a step ladder and peering through a window. "My child was traumatized by the sight," he tells the ACLU. Nothing newsworthy happens to Paris Hilton.

HEALTH NOTES

How flu spreads around the world

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As federal, state and private organizations study how disease spreads around the world, there's a growing appreciation of the role which our complex transportation infrastructure plays in the propagation of illnesses such as flu. Here are some of the transportation and communication issues to be considered when planing for a possible pandemic.

Conventional epidemic models assume a fixed population (a city and its environs) without considering transportation. So they work well for, perhaps, a walled city, but not for a city like Hong Kong or New York. The key to modern disease migration is the transportation system which acts as both a vector and as an incubator, moving large numbers of people while holding them in close proximity for several hours or days. The "Spanish Flu" event of 1918 was converted from a serious epidemic outbreak into a global pandemic largely by the transportation system. The particular characteristics of that influenza strain made it well suited to such a conversion. The disease could spread in aerosol(microscopic airborne particles) as can most flu variants, but it was especially fast moving once introduced into a host human. In many cases, by the time diagnosis was established it was too late for the victim, and even when the pathogen was known, recovery was far from certain.

The first cases showed up at eastern ports as soldiers returned from Europe by a ship which acted as both vector and incubator; individuals infecting many while holding them in close proximity all at once. Then, as the severity of the disease was becoming known, it was being spread westward via the rail system.

Today's transportation system presents a much more complex problem to the epidemiologist. The transportation system is global in scope, providing access to the most remote corner of the world in a matter of days. People and freight travel far and wide on a regular basis, using a combination of aviation-based long haul and shorter trip legs based on motor vehicles and rail. The disease will propagate by dispersion of hundreds of hosts following various, complex routings to many distributed destinations and then disperse again from those destinations riding with hundreds of different hosts. Thus, the complex dynamics of transportation are added to the already substantial complexities of disease propagation in relatively fixed populations.

The SARS infection is a case in point. In early stages, in Fall 2002, SARS was restricted to a limited region in China. The spread was not widespread until cases started to arrive in larger population centers. The first cases were detected in Hong Kong in February 2003, and by March, significant numbers were appearing in many parts of Southeast Asia, several cities in North America, including Toronto, and in Europe. Mainly, hosts traveling on airlines spread the disease to international locations, and many cases appearing in the US were the result of secondary trips from Toronto. Some difficulties with SARS were its rapid, global reach, and maintaining an effective quarantine. Because of SARS, most studies have focused on air travel with less emphasis on automobiles or buses, or in Europe, trains. These modes can carry a host hundreds of miles in 24 hours.

Airlines use a system called "hub and spoke" to optimize use of their aircraft. An individual may travel from an outlying town to a large metropolitan center, change planes, and travel to another large center, change again, and travel to a final destination spreading disease as he infects passengers on each leg of the trip. They in turn will disperse from the hub points to many other locales. Ironically, the effect of airport security is to isolate the travelers on the hub terminals, so that the least threatened area may be the hub city itself. Thus, the "hub and spoke" system functions as an effective dispersal mechanism for disease. For instance, an Ebola variant may incubate fast enough to make a host infected during an initial flight leg contagious during a subsequent flight leg. A flight steward might be a candidate for this type of secondary infection. A less virulent infection might not manage to re-infect during a single day, but may disperse hosts who will become contagious within a few days. A Spanish Flu look-alike might accomplish such a dispersion.

Predicting the spread of disease must take these complexities into account. Fortunately a dedicated few who understand the interaction of these factors are already planning for the first sign of such an epidemic.

Cohasset seniors are 'cooked' when it comes to affordable units

vide much needed affordable senior housing for Cohasset residents, the restrictions of the SMROD bylaw will most likely prevent Cohasset residents from living in any affordable units to be built.

To qualify for affordable housing, the state has set certain regulations. There are asset and income guidelines to be met, and while some Cohasset seniors might pass the income test, with the way real estate sells in Cohasset, Engler said it is virtually impossible for a senior to sell his or her home and not come away with more money than is allowed to be able to rent or purchase an affordable unit. "There never used to be an asset test, only income," he said, but the regulations for affordable housing are constantly changing.

Seniors who wish to live in affordable ownership housing must not have more than $200,000 in equity, which with the sale of a home in Cohasset is nearly impossible. In addition, they must not have more than $50,000 in other assets. Engler said therefore, to purchase an affordable unit "you need to sell and have nothing."

In addition, unless everyone in the household is 62 years or more, they may not have owned a home within the past three years in order to qualify to purchase an affordable unit. In other words, to qualify to live in the Cook Estate's affordable units, "You cannot have owned a house in Cohasset," he said.

Seniors who wish to live in affordable ownership housing must not have more than $200,000 in equity.

Rental rules

Affordable rental housing guidelines are just as difficult to meet. The state says households in the 60 to 80 percent median income range (roughly $40,000 to $50,000 per year) may only have $50,000 in assets in order to qualify, which is even more restrictive.

Engler guessed the people who will move to the Cook Estate "will be the parents of those who live here," adding the typical candidate will be someone who has been able to sell their home in Florida and have less than $200,000 in assets and is therefore able to come back to Cohasset and qualify for the affordable units. While he said the units will be filled, they will not be occupied by Cohasset seniors, and the town should consider whether it agrees with the idea that "people who have roots in the community in which they grew up should have the opportunity to stay."

In addition to the project's not being able to provide what the town had wanted, Engler said as the town drafts its third Request for Proposals, which indicates what the town would like to see built on the land, he would suggest it not restrict the development and require rental units, even though many in town have said there is a need for senior rental housing. In his experience, rental housing and market-rate housing do not mix in the same development. "But that's just my opinion, that's not to say someone else won't come in and say, 'I can make it work'," he said.

Engler said the market will direct developers in their proposals and the town will have a decision to make once bids are received. However, "My background says it's very difficult," to make senior rental housing work in a development which also includes market-rate units.

Engler said many other towns have a high resale value for homes and run into the same problems as Cohasset. He said that leaves communities with the questions of who do you want to help, and what do you want to "count." Cohasset is trying to meet a 10 percent affordable housing threshold set by the state. "Other towns say, 'we're going to help the people in town'," he said, adding that is a decision Cohasset must make.

Selectman Rob Spofford said at this point, the town has voted on the project and it has said it will be regulated by the SMROD bylaw. He said therefore, to change the project would require another Town Meeting vote, and with the time constraints the board is currently working with, there is no time to go backwards.

The board of selectmen held a public hearing on the Cook Estate Thursday after the Mariner went to press to gain feedback from residents for the RFP. The board will discuss the Cook Estate again at its Tuesday, Jan. 10 meeting. The new RFP for the project will be sent out by Friday, Jan. 13.

Community comes together to help the Doonan family

Lost house in New Year's Day fire

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A Cohasset family is out of a home, but not out of luck.

The Doonans of 730 Jerusalem Road are surrounded by friends and a town that cares.

No sooner had the last embers of a blaze the rendered their house uninhabitable Sunday evening been put out then a web site was launched seeking cash and non-monetary donations to help the family.

"They are a well loved family whose friendships and contacts spread far and wide," the web site, www.cohassetcares.com states. "Already there has been a tremendous outpouring of generosity and support for them.

"Typical of our great town, many friends and strangers have contacted us wondering how they can help."

Rob Doonan was home when a fire started in the dryer in the lower level of the split-level home.

According the to fire department, Mr. Doonan burned his hands pulling clothes from the dryer. He refused medical treatment at the scene. Mr. Doonan was the only person injured; the family's dog Lexi perished in the fire.

"Typical of our great town, many friends and strangers have contacted us wondering how they can help."

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the homeowner went to a neighbor's house to report the fire; the rest of the family was at a hockey game.

The call came into dispatch at 5:14 p.m., Sunday. Lincoln said firefighters from Cohasset and Hull who were first on the scene brought the fire under control quickly.

"It was knocked down in about half an hour," he said. "But we were there quite a while overhauling and checking for extension and didn't leave until 11:30 p.m."

Lincoln explained that sheet rock has to be pulled down to check into the partitions to make sure that all fire is extinguished.

He confirmed the fire was caused by lint in the dryer that was on the lower level in laundry room in the finished basement area. The fire caused damage to the laundry room, boiler room, and finished room; smoke and heat damage worked its way into partitions of the first floor. The fire was under control before it spread to the upper level, he said.

Lincoln said it is his policy not to provide damage estimates, leaving that up to insurance adjusters.

Twelve Cohasset firefighters, including on-duty, off-duty and call firefighters, responded to the scene, along with six firefighters from Hull and three from Scituate. A Hingham engine covered Cohasset fire headquarters.

"The firefighters did their usual good work in bringing the fire under control so quickly," he said.

According to the cohassetcares web site, the Doonans are living in a rental house in Hull that belongs to their neighbors and is fully equipped and furnished. "A couple of Cohasset houses are for rent and they will be looking into those over the next few weeks," the web site states.

"This is a start and any and all ideas are welcome on how to make this as easy as possible for the Doonans...," the web site says. "The Doonans have been truly overwhelmed by all the support they have received. Thank you in advance for your concern."

Pastor returning to his roots

In fact when Cutler arrived, there were only 10 children in the entire church and the church school had closed. "Today we have the most children as a percentage of the congregation than any other church in the diocese," he says with pride.

However, he admits when they first arrived to having a little trouble making the transition from the inner city to quiet Cohasset.

"I remember one night wanting to go down the steps by the Independence Building (now Wild Plums) but there were no lights," he recalls. "Even though I knew it was safe, I couldn't force myself to go down – it took a while to change my habits."

Cutler, who made the announcement that he is leaving at the Nov. 9 church service and later in a letter to parishioners, starts at St. Paul's Church in Chestnut Hill, a section of Philadelphia, in early February.

"It was very difficult," he recalls about the decision to leave Cohasset. "This is a wonderful community and parish. I am not leaving without a lot of consideration and thought."

He understands well that serving as pastor is all about honoring relationships and there will be ample opportunities for parishioners and the community to say goodbye. At 1 p.m. today (Friday) an event is planned at the Council on Elder Affairs to honor Cutler; there will also be a tea from 2-5 p.m. in the Bartow Room at St. Stephen's Saturday afternoon where people can share stories and remembrances. And from 7-9 p.m., Jan. 14, St. Stephen's will host a reception at Walton Rodgers Hall that will include a slide show of the church over the years.

The assistant rector at St. Stephen's, the Rev. Beth Wheatley-Dyson, will serve as interim priest, while the search for a new rector gets under way. A search committee has been formed as well as a group that is creating a profile of St. Stephen's and the community that can be used in the search process. Cutler estimates it will be about 18 months before the parish is ready to invite a new pastor to come and take charge of the ministry.

Cutler is proud of much that St. Stephen's has accomplished over the past 20 years but at the top of the list is how the church has used its resources to better the lives of others. From providing a $30,000 grant to help the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham, a residential educational program for homeless families, primarily women with young children, get started years ago — to its more recent efforts with Caribbean U-Turn, an organization dedicated to turning around the lives of at-risk youth of Caribbean descent — the church is involved well beyond the borders of Cohasset.

In fact, through the church's involvement with Caribbean-U-Turn, St. Stephen's youth worked to raise money to purchase a system that would treat 10,000 gallons of water per day, enough to provide an entire community in Haiti with a reliable source of pure drinking water.

Cutler has found Cohasset to be a nurturing place to raise a family. "It was everything we looked for when we left Philadelphia," he says. "I want to thank everyone in the parish who helped me grow and thank the people of Cohasset."

Cutler says he hopes at the end of 10-12 years at his new church, he'll be able to be as proud of St. Paul's as he is of St. Stephen's.

"It's going to be nice just being home," he says. "It seems like that's a nice place to end up."

Dorian leads wrestlers in Marshfield tourney

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset-Hull wrestling team probably didn't finish where they would have liked in last week's Marshfield tournament (17th out of 28 teams), but saw four standout individual performances.

Leading the way was senior co-captain Shane Dorian at 145 pounds. The defending Division 3 state champion looked impressive in winning four matches, all via pin, to advance to the finals of his weight class against Plymouth South's Vinnie Renaut.

Renaut, who finished third in All-States last season, pinned Dorian in the second round. Plymouth South won the team competition, and Renaut was named Outstanding Wrestler for the tournament.

At 112, junior Ryan McClellan took fourth place in a performance that head coach Torin Sweeney called "probably the biggest surprise in the whole tournament." Coming into the competition unseeded (there where eight seeds out of the 28 wrestlers in the weight class), McClellan knocked off two of the top six seeds, including a grappler from Mansfield who had beaten him earlier in the season.

In the semifinals, McClellan hung tough into the third period with Sharon's Ben Carver, who wound up winning the tourney at 112.

Talk about defending your homecourt.

The CHS girls basketball team did just that last week, defeating Sacred Heart (39-38) and Hull (38-28) to win the Cohasset Holiday Basketball Classic.

After watching his young team struggle during the preseason and start to the regular season, head coach John Levangie is beginning to like what he is seeing.

"Week after week, we keep on improving," he said Wednesday. "At the beginning of the season, our turnovers were atrocious. But we've been doing so much better. Our starting guards, Chelsea Grossman and Gabby Flibbotte, have done a good job handling the ball. Our kids, offensively, are doing things now they couldn't do a month ago."

Against Sacred Heart, Levangie says he got good games from his entire starting five, which also includes Samantha Lehr, Mia Lieb-Lappen and Lacey Richardson. Lieb-Lappen has been a key contributor throughout the young season with her interior

The best game ever?

MUSINGS OF A BLEACHER BUM

MARK GOODMAN

Texas-USC was the greatest game I've ever watched. In any sport, at any level, championship or no championship at stake.

Granted, my sports memory vault doesn't truly begin until around 1990, but...

Texas-USC was the greatest game I've ever watched. In any sport, at any level, championship or no championship at stake.

It wasn't shaping up to be so through the first quarter. With both teams not having played in the last six months (or so it seemed, anyway), there was more than a little rust on both sides. If this game was played on Dec. 19, the final score may have been 55-52.

And how about some of the coaching decisions in that first quarter? Texas has fourth-and-one, and they hand off to a running back? USC, in the same situation on its next drive, run a quarterback sneak for Matt Leinart? Interesting. Reggie Bush and Vince Young finished 1-2 in Heisman voting for a reason. Give them the ball in any and all fourth-and-short situations.

For Pete Carroll, let's just say this game wasn't exactly his shining moment. I agree with the fourth down call with two minutes left. If you're essentially one play away from winning a championship, you go for it. Every time. Of course, if the Heisman winner is on your team, you may want to give him the ball in that situation...or at least have him on the field.

It doesn't end there. Why did it take 58 minutes for USC to start blitzing Vince Young? And when they did it on the first two plays of Texas' final drive, which led to a third-and-12 for the Longhorns, why did they inexplicably stop?

Then there was the timeout on that final two-point conversion. We won't go there.

We also won't jump on the "Bush didn't show up" bandwagon. I'll take 180 rushing and receiving yards against a defense that keying on him the whole game, anytime. And that 25-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter was the most breathtaking play of the game. Only the speed of light itself would have caught Bush on that play. Simply electrifying.

As for Mr. Young... Before Wednesday night, the only athlete that ever made smile in the middle of a game, simply from the enjoyment of knowing I was watching greatness in its purest form, was Pedro Martinez. But on that last drive, and that last touchdown run on a fourth-and-five, Young was added to the list.

And did you see his reaction after scoring that touchdown? You didn't, because there wasn't any. He simply ran over to the Texas cheering section, let them bask in the glory of knowing they were possibly 16 seconds away from a national championship, and then got back out there for the two-point conversion. In a modern football world where players feel the need to dance or showboat after every first down, or every tackle, that may have been Young's crowning moment.

An offering of other random thoughts from the game:

Kudos to Dan Fouts, who did a great job of both play-by-play and color commentary. Keith Jackson hasn't just lost his fastball, he's lost his curve and changeup, too. Whoa Nellie, did he stink.

Perhaps the best thing I've heard said about Young in the last two days came Thursday morning on Dennis and Callahan, when a caller compared him to "a rich man's Randall Cunningham."

defense and rebounding.

Katie James has also been playing well off the bench.

"She always gives us a lift; it's like having a sixth starter," Levangie said.

After the win over Hull, Grossman and Flibbotte were named to the all-tournament team. Flibbotte, who scored a game-high 15 points against the Pirates, won the Tim Owens tournament MVP award, named after the former CHS assistant boys basketball coach who passed away in 2004.

"Gabby had an outstanding game that night, probably her best of the year," said Levangie. "She was great offensively; she handled the ball really well."

The coach also praised the efforts from reserves Carly Salerno, Kayla Farren and Haley Haracz.

As the scores of those two tournament games would indicate, Cohasset has been playing some good defense lately. Levangie has begun to implement a man-to-man defensive scheme, saying his team has the necessary attributes to play that style of basketball.

"They're quick and the play very hard," said the veteran coach. "Getting them to understand the defense is taking time, but they're beginning to pick it up."

The Skippers were 3-2 heading into last night's key South Shore League game with Abington. Next week, Cohasset faces two more challenging league games, both on the road: Tuesday at Carver and Friday at Harwich.

"We're going into a stretch of several tough ones in a row," Levangie said. "If we can steal one or two of these games, that would be great for us."

larly impressed with the performance of senior co-captain Dave McKenna, who finished sixth at 152. Sweeney called that weight class the toughest of the tournament, with six athletes who placed in the state last season. Last year's Marshfield champion did not even finish in the top six this year.

"In a weight class like that, you make one mistake and you're done," Sweeney said. "I thought Dave wrestled well, but of course he wanted to win it. Four of those kids will be in this weekend's North Quincy tournament (in which Cohasset is participating), so I know he'll be looking to that as an opportunity to bounce back."

Rounding out Cohasset's top performers in Marshfield was junior Nick Cambi at 189. Cambi made it to the quarterfinals before losing, and finished fifth after defeating Whitman-Hanson's Mike Sharp via a 4-2 decision in the fifth-place match.

As a team, Sweeney continues to look for others to step up.

"We basically wrestled to our potential [at Marshfield]," he said. "We are what we are, which is a 17th place team out of 28. Right now, we just need to continue to work on the basics and get better."

After Saturday's 18-team NQ tournament, the Skippers return to dual meet action Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in Norwell.

The best game ever?

That seems to make some sense.

Speaking of Young, if he does come out for the draft, how long will it take the sports columnists in Houston to start pressuring the Texans to take him? Two days? One day? David Carr is probably rolling his eyes already.

With that said, Houston has to take Bush. You don't pass on the best college running back since Barry Sanders.

USC receiver Dwayne Jarrett is a stud. I'll be very surprised if he's not a top five pick in the 2007 NFL Draft.

Underrated performance of the night: the Texas offensive line. Save for when he tucked it and ran, was Young on the ground even once? And then the big fellas stormed the ESPN College Gameday postgame set and got themselves on TV. A great night all around for them.

How long before we start hearing the "For a head coach, Pete Carroll makes a great coordinator" jokes around here again?

And on that note…

Cohasset girls travel basketball

8th graders off to 4-0 start

The eighth graders continued their impressive winning streak prior to the Christmas break with wins over Duxbury (42-23) and Raynham (27-11).

Against Duxbury the scoring was evenly distributed, but Cohasset was led by a particularly strong all-around effort from Tori Lehr, who rebounded aggressively, scored frequently, and led several fast breaks.

Duxbury tried to press the entire game, but Cohasset was able to easily break the press using sharp inbound passes from Erin Fontaine. The victory was the hoopsters' third win in a row, all of which had come on the road.

Playing again the next day and finally at home, Cohasset faced off against Raynham. The first half was a defensive battle with Mimi Mahoney, Samantha Crough, and Chelsea Silvia applying constant pressure on Raynham's guards that resulted in a number of steals. Unfortunately, Cohasset was having difficulty making even the easiest of shots and the first half score was only 11-11.

In the second half Cohasset's defensive pressure was even more intense and the offense began to click. In fact, Cohasset shut out Raynham in the second half while scoring 16 points to win 27-11. Leading the scoring effort were Lindsey Allard with 10 points, Isabelle Franklin with eight points, and Meredith Kelly with six points.

The V-8s are now 4-0 and have already surpassed their win total from last year.

The 7th grade team stayed at the .500 mark with a tough loss at Duxbury and a runaway win over Raynham. The Duxbury contest was the most frustrating game in three years for the Sevens, who scored only three points by the intermission.When Duxbury increased its lead to 10-3 early into the secomd half, the picture looked even bleaker.

However, the Blue and White girls soon found their scoring touch. Emma Quigley sank a basket, followed by buckets from Carli Haggerty and Lindsay Davis. When Haggerty came back with another hoop, Cohasset had completed an 8-0 run to pull out into an 11-10 advantage with under three minutes to play.

However, the Cohasset girls, who were playing with only six players, ran out of steam. A missed shot close-in was followed by a Duxbury 2-on-1 break. Duxbury then sank its foul shots down the stretch for a 17-11 victory.

The following day the Cohasset Seven-Ups easily ran past Raynham, 38-8. Haggerty led the point parade with 21 points, followed by Davis with 13. Carly Martin and Quigley also contributed a bucket apiece.

Sixth graders improving

The sixth grade grade girls took an early lead against Duxbury with fast breaks led by Anna Seraikas and Christie Fitzgerald. Tight defense by Olivia Franklin and Isabel Robinson frustrated the Duxbury squad and the first half ended with Cohasset holding an 11-10 advantage.

In the second half, set up with assists from Elisa Tedeschi and other teammates, center Allie Farren came alive, dropping in six points. Jen Mullin worked hard under the basket pulling down defensive rebounds and spending time on the foul line.

Duxbury pressed in the second half and Cohasset was effective at breaking the press. However, a few forced turnovers resulted in Duxbury baskets. Outscored in the second half 14 to 8, Cohasset lost this exciting, well-played contest, 25-19.

Fitzgerald led the team with nine points, Farren had six, and Serakis contributed four.

On the home court before Christmas break, the Sixers faced off against a talented Raynham squad. Early in the contest, Cohasset kept pace with Raynham. On fast breaks Cohasset put six points on the board early and an aggressive man-to-man defense by Olivia Franklin, Allie Farren, and Isabel Robinson held the Raynham squad to within striking distance.

Fouls put Raynham on the line where they sank six shots, and at the end of the half the score was 16-8. In the second half, Cohasset continued to play aggressive defense, but with both Farren and Robinson sidelined by fouls, the Cohasset squad saw little rest.

Jen Mullin stepped up and put in four points. However, even with aggressive play from Anna Seraikas, Sage Stebbins, and Elisa Tedeschi, the squad could not stop the hot shooting Raynham team. Outscored 10-2 in the second half, Cohasset dropped the contest 28-8. Mullin led the squad with four points with Farren and Fitzgerald each chipping in a basket.

This sixth grade team has already outpaced their scoring totals for last year, and although they have faced a few early season challenges, this nine-person squad of extremely committed teammates are all back, healthy, and ready to play ball.

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset Youth Baseball & Softball Registration

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association will hold its annual registration for theupcoming baseball and softball season from Jan. 1 through Feb. 1.

Parents/guardians have two options for registration: CYBSA will hold a registration on Saturday, January 21, from 9 a.m. to noon, in the lower lobby of the High School gymnasium. In the alternative, parents/guardians may register children by mail, provided that mailed registrations are postmarked no later than February 1, 2006. Registration forms will be available at Town Hall, or via e-mail requests at CYBSA02025@yahoo.com.

Registrations that are received or postmarked after February 1 will be subject to a per player $25 late registration fee. The late fee will be strictly enforced, and there is no guarantee that late registered players will be accommodated, as uniform orders and other season plans will be made on February 1. Your cooperation in registering players in a timely manner is greatly appreciated, as it allows the CYBSA to establish rosters and order uniforms so that we are ready for opening day.

The registration is for boys aged 5 to 12 (for Little League) and 13 and 14 (for Junior League) as of April 30, 2006. The registration for the girls softball aged 5 to 12 (for Little League) and 13 and 14 (for Junior League) as of December 31, 2005. Please note that these age cutoff dates are changes that are being implemented by our organization's governing body this year. Note that girls softball has a different age cutoff date than baseball; that is a rule implemented by the CYBSA's governing body.

A copy of the child's birth certificate must accompany a new player's registration forms.

The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the junior league baseball and softball programs will be $125. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the major league baseball (ages 10 to 12) and softball divisions (ages 11 and 12) will be $125. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the American League division for baseball (ages 9-11) and softball (ages 9-11) divisions will be $100. The registration fee for boys and girls in the National League division for baseball (ages 6-8) and Instructional Softball (ages 7-8) will be $85. The registration fee for the farm league instructional division (boys and girls ages 5-6) will be $65.

Please be advised that children assigned to Major League teams are still required to register. Please note that boys and girls who are 6 years old, but who played in the farm league last year are eligible to play in the National League Division this year. Please contact Liam O'Connell at 781-383-9538, or via email at ltoconnell@hklaw.com if you have questions about player eligibility.

Please be advised that the child protection program instituted by Little League governing organization requires that all adults interested in coaching, managing or volunteering in any way, are required to register at this same time and supply a photocopy of a government issued identification. Individuals not complying with this requirement will not be allowed to participate in the CYBSA program.

Questions regarding either player or coach registration, or the programs offered to players, may be directed to Liam O'Connell at (781) 383-9538 or Nancy Froio at (781)-383-1897. Thank you.

Youth lacrosse sign-up open through Jan. 7

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will finish its spring 2006 registration with a second sign-up day, on January 7 from 9 - 11:30 a.m. at Cohasset High School.

Parents can come to that sign-up day, or can request paperwork via e-mail and return it by January 8.

"After January 7, we would expect to be at our ideal roster size in a few different age groups, so signing up on time is important," says Chuck Jaffe, director of Cohasset Youth Lacrosse. "We will take everyone who signs up during the registration period, even if it puts us above our ideal roster sizes, but there's not going to be much hope for latecomers in certain age groups once the registration period closes."

To that end, Jaffe suggests that parents who have any concern about forgetting or missing the Jan. 7 final sign-up simply drop him an e-mail at CAJaffe@aol.com or call 781-383-9858, telling him the number of children they are registering for the season.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will field boys and girls teams in the 11-and-Under (grades 3 and 4), 13-and-Under (grades 5 and 6) and 15-and-Under age groups.

At all levels, practices should not conflict with most other youth sports activities.

Registration for 2006 costs $150 for one player, $275 for two players and $100 per child thereafter.

To receive forms or get more information on Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, call 781-383-9858 or e-mail CAJaffe@aol.com.

Science Center owl comes to town

Staff photos/Robin Chan

Margaret Curley, 3, wears the owl mask she made during a lesson on New England owls at One Creative Place Thursday, Dec. 15. Hedwig the owl traveled from his home at the South Shore Natural Science Center to pay the children a visit.

Alex Soltesz, 3, of Scituate, makes "owl eyes" at One Creative Place during a visit from Hedwig the owl, of the South Shore Science Center in Norwell. Children were given a presentation on New England owls Thursday, Dec. 15, during which they learned owls are nocturnal, and have very good "binocular" vision at night.

Above, Hedwig, a barred owl from the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, paid a visit to the children at One Creative Place Thursday, Dec. 15. Hedwig is a non-releasable raptor who was visiting to help teach the children about New England owls.

Melissa Kurkoski, a naturalist from the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, flaps a red tail hawk wing, to show the children how much louder it is than an owl wing. The children learned during the presentation that owls are nocturnal, and therefore hunt at night, and fly much more slowly and quietly than hawks which are diurnal, meaning they sleep at night and fly fast when they hunt during the day.

Above, Natalie Devin, 3, pretends to be asleep, mimicking the nocturnal habits of Hedwig the owl. Hedwig lives at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell, and visited the children at One Creative Place in Jonathan Livingston Square, Thursday, Dec. 15 as part of an educational program on New England owls.

Right, Sam Hess, 3, is initially frightened by Hedwig, a barred owl from the South Shore Natural Science Center, who flapped his wings loudly as he too was frightened upon entering a new environment. The two were at One Creative Place Thursday, Dec. 15 for a presentation on wildlife. Nate Thomas, 4-1/2, is in the background.

POLICE/FIRE BRIEFS

Rte. 3A left-turn crash

Town officials are concerned about traffic problems along Rte. 3A, especially the difficulty to make left turns onto or off of the state highway that stretches through town from the Hingham to Scituate lines.

If any of them were eating at Acapulco's last Friday night, they would have had a front-row seat on one of the most recent accidents.

Police Chief James Hussey said about 7:40 p.m., Dec. 30, a Nissan was making a left-turn into the driveway that leads to both Acapulco's and Dunkin' Donuts. The car failed to yield and hit a Subaru travelling northbound; the Subaru then collided with a Mercedes travelling southbound behind the Nissan.

The driver of the Nissan was cited for failure to yield, Hussey said. A passenger in the Mercedes was transported to the hospital but the individual's injuries did not appear to be life threatening, he said.

Police had to shut 3A down to through traffic, detouring vehicles at lower King and Sohier streets until the accident was cleaned up. Two wreckers were called to the scene.

Youths charged with vandalism

Police Chief James Hussey said two juveniles are facing vandalism charges to property on Sohier Street, some of which involves allegedly damaging mailboxes. Officers took the youths, ages 13 and 14, into custody after recent incidents and released them to their parents; they will be summonsed to court on charges of malicious destruction of property valued over $250.

The names of the youths are not being released because they are under 17 years of age.

Fire department had busy November

A summary of fire department responses during November is as follows: eight building fires; three brush fires; seven motor vehicle crashes; 59 medical emergencies; 11 investigations; 34 inspections; eight assistance calls; and 28 miscellaneous responses. There were no motor vehicle fires during November. Forty-three emergency incidents were reported by 911 telephone, Chief Roger Lincoln said.

The fire department ambulance transported 46 patients to hospitals. Mutual aid ambulances transported three patients from Cohasset. One motor vehicle crash resulted in the transport of two patients to the hospital. Forty-seven patients were transported to South Shore Hospital and two patients were transported to Quincy Medical Center.

Fire alarm system activation responses totaled 11 during November. Accidental activation of the alarm systems accounted for six responses, and alarm malfunction was the cause of five responses. The eight responses classed as building fires were caused by: two, electrical; three, food on the stove-oven fire; two, oil burner malfunction; and one, washing machine fire.

Also, the fire department has recorded over 200 more responses than last year at this time, Lincoln said.

Nomination Deadline: Friday, Jan. 13th at 5 p.m.

Citizen search extended one week

See nomination form on page 20

Due to the timing of the holidays this year, the Cohasset Mariner is extending the deadline for nominations for the Citizen of the Year until next Friday, Jan. 13.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored John Coe as Citizen of the Year, a WWII veteran, whose volunteer service at the Senior Center helps make it a warm, friendly place. He was also recognized for his service as the beloved Town Crier at the Village Fair and for his countless other good deeds behind the scenes.

The deadline for nominations for the 2005 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m. Friday, Jan 13. Please see the nomination form on page 20. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931. Letters of nomination by email to mford@cnc.com are also welcome.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the Citizen of the Year.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, firefighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the13th person honored as the Cohasset Citizen of the Year, joining past recipients:

1993: the late Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset": for his more than half-century of contributions to the community, including serving as chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister and usher at St. Anthony's Church.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the healthcare system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little league, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to sewer the town. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home building ministry in central Appalachia.

1997: Anna Abbruzzese, for all her volunteer work including preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn, driving the senior shuttle and coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club at the Council on Elder Affairs; and her many efforts to help revitalize Cohasset Village through the Farmers' Market and much more.

1998: Katherine Stanton, for her tireless service to the town and its citizens over the years. She also volunteers as a case reviewer for the state Dept. of Social Services, served on the school committee and recreation committee, and along with her family was involved with the creation of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

1999: the late Clark Chatterton, for his generosity of spirit and deep caring for his fellow man, his years of work as a teacher and athletic director at the high school, including innumerable efforts helping others behind the scenes. He also helped raise money for many causes including Alumni Field and the American Cancer Society.

2000: former state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray for a lifetime of service to her hometown, first as den mother and Little League mother and Girl Scout leader, and then as selectman. She was also honored for her public service as state representative for more than two decades and for always putting her constituents first.

2001: Glenn Pratt for his dogged determination over 20 years to see more cemetery space in town, remembering local soldiers who made the ultimate sacrifice, helping to lead the effort to expand the community center, serving as an elected official, and spearheading the effort to build a memorial to local mothers who lost sons in wartime.

2002: Arthur Lehr for more than 50 years of volunteer service on worthwhile projects including the Boy Scouts; serving on the Zoning Board of Appeals and as a Registrar of Voters; Clerk of the Works for the DPW garage, Little League Complex, and Mariners Park; serving on the Recycling Committee, as town Civil Defense Director, on Gravel Pit Reuse Committee and more.

2003: Marjorie Murphy for touching countless lives through her roughly 25 years as school librarian at Deer Hill. With eyes that twinkle and an infectious smile, Mrs. Murphy - fondly known as Marjie - devoted her life to helping children discover the wonders of reading and the value of a good book.

2004: John Coe, a WWII veteran, for all his volunteer service at the Senior Center where he helps make the center a warm place where people come and meet friends; for his work quietly behind the scenes helping fellow citizens and his service as the "beloved Town Crier" every year at the Village Fair.

A NOTICEABLE SHIFT

When you experience ringing in your ears the day after a loud rock concert, you have a case of "temporary threshold shift." This phenomenon is the result of insult to the hair cells of the inner ear. These are the microscopic hair-like cells that are responsible for converting vibrations received from the eardrum into electrical signals that are carried by the auditory nerve to the brain. As the hair cells become damaged due to loud noise, their ability to function is compromised. As a result, there is fullness and ringing in the ears. Fortunately, the hair cells may recover to restore hearing, but more prolonged exposure to noise can lead to a permanent shift threshold shift and permanent hearing loss.

Because loud rock concerts aren't the only hazard to healthy hearing, no matter what your choice of recreation, hobby, sport, or occupation, protect your hearing! Little in life affects your daily happiness and well-being as the ability to hear, understand, and communicate. Wondering about your hearing acuity? Come see us at the FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER for a free hearing evaluation. With today's technology, there is no reason to put up with missing out on the sounds of life. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, with a second office in Abington. You can reach us at 781-337-1144 or visit our website at www.familyhearing.net.

P.S. Accumulated exposure to loud noise is responsible for hearing loss at younger ages than ever before.

Wyeth's Pennsylvania

By FRAN GOLDEN

CHADDS FORD, Pa. -- The cool thing about America's greatest living artist is that folks here (and up in Cushing, Maine, where he summers) know him as Andy. Andy is really Andrew Wyeth, the incredibly prolific realist painter; the first visual artist to be awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, by President Kennedy in 1963, and the first artist again to be awarded the Congressional Gold Medal in 1990.

Stop by the local diner, Hank's Place (U.S. Routes 1 and 100) early in the morning and you might spot Andy eating fried eggs and scrapple and drinking chocolate milk, accompanied by his 20-something granddaughter Victoria, who graduated from Bates.

Or you may spot him by the side of the road with his easel. Or in the road -- as one story goes, one time he was standing in the middle of a road painting and rather than telling him to move, the police came by and simply put cones around him to block traffic.

Wyeth is now 88, has painted for seven decades and shows no signs of letting up.

"He loves it. He really loves it. Every day he's out there painting. Middle of a snow storm last year, I'm like, 'What are you doing?' 'I'm goin' painting, Vic,' " Victoria Wyeth said.

She said the most frequent question she is asked about her famous grandfather is if he's still alive.

"People say he must be dead. He can't be living and be this famous," she said.

Perhaps people will get it when they see the major retrospective of Wyeth's work, "Andrew Wyeth: Memory and Magic," organized by the Philadelphia Museum of Art and High Museum of Art in Atlanta. In Atlanta until Feb. 16, the show runs in Philadelphia March 29-July 16 (ticket information at www.philamuseum.org).

Featured are more than 100 works in tempera, watercolor and drawings from Wyeth's personal collection.

The artist's most famous work is "Christina's World," on display at the Museum of Modern Art in New York. It depicts a handicapped woman crawling through a field to a farmhouse in Maine. His most notorious works were the nude paintings of a blond, pigtailed Prussian woman, Helga, who came to care for Wyeth's German neighbor here -- as the story goes, Wyeth painted Helga over the course of many years without telling his wife, Betsey (because she had indicated before that when he painted nudes she didn't want to know). This led to rumors.

Victoria, who occasionally leads tours and lectures on her grandfather's work at the Brandywine River Museum here and the Farnsworth Art Museum and Wyeth Center in Rockland, Maine (she also will lead some tours during the Philadelphia show) said she is sick of the Helga question.

"Helga could pose for six or seven hours," she said of Andrew's interest. "He kept the nudes secret for 15 years. The press really blew it out of proportion. Helga is not that big a deal. It's just that he kept it a secret," she said.

"They're just friends; people need to get beyond the gossip," she said, adding her grandparents are happily married.

To further illustrate the point, Victoria added she herself has posed nude for her grandfather, and it was not a big deal.

"He paints his life, what he knows and who he knows," she said. As for this small town, Victoria added, "this place is alive with inspiration."

The Pennsylvania farmland, about 30 miles from downtown Philadelphia, first attracted Andrew's father, N.C. Wyeth, born in Needham, who moved to the Brandywine Valley to study with famous illustrator Howard Pyle. N.C. gained acclaim in his own right and bought a farmhouse here with his proceeds from illustrating "Treasure Island." On the farm, he and his wife raised five kids, three of whom became painters -- Andrew, the youngest, was born in 1917. N.C. died tragically when his car stalled on railroad tracks here in 1945. But the painting legacy continues with yet another generation -- Andrew's son Jamie is also a renowned painter, his most famous work a posthumous portrait of President Kennedy.

All three generations of Wyeth creations are on display at the Brandywine and Farnsworth museums.

Victoria, whose father, Nicholas, is an art dealer, is the sole grandchild of Wyeth and does not paint -- she hopes to pursue a Ph.D. in psychology.

Wyeth's talent appeared early , and he was only 15 when he found a lifelong muse. That's when he went out walking here and came upon the big white farmhouse that today is known as Kuerner Farm, home of German immigrants Karl and Anna Kuerner and their five kids. Wyeth has painted the farm's animals, buildings, people (including caretaker Helga) and landscapes, more than 1,000 paintings in total, for more than 70 years.

Today the farm is open to visitors, with tours departing from the Brandywine River Museum, late April through November.

Also open for visitors is the nearby N.C. Wyeth Studio, a National Historic Landmark. You can tour the studio where there are original paintings, props and artifacts that inspired N.C.'s illustrations (the coolest is a birch Penobscot Indian canoe), as well as the house where N.C. raised his creative kids.

The riverfront Brandywine (www.brandywinemuseum.org) and Farnsworth up in Maine (www.farnsworthmuseum.org) are the two major repositories of the work of all three generations of Wyeth artists. In conjunction with the Philadelphia show, the Brandywine will display "Andrew Wyeth: Master Drawings from the Artist's Collection," March through July, with more than 40 works from Wyeth's private collection. On a recent visit I spotted a tweed-clad Jamie buying books in the museum's gift shop, so keep your eyes peeled for Wyeths here.

Regular museum admission is $8 adults, $5 seniors and students; the farm and studio tours are an additinal $5, including shuttle bus service to the sites.

Also jumping on the Wyeth bandwagon, the Wilmington, Del.-based Delaware Art Museum (www.delart.org), only about 40 minutes from Philadelphia, will host a Wyeth exhibition, "Something Waits Beneath It" (March 29-July 16), with 32 early and seldom seen works by the young Andrew Wyeth, including watercolors and tempera paintings of coastal Maine and eastern Pennsylvania created from 1939 through the 1960s.

If you go...

STAYING THERE: To appreciate Wyeth, a country stay is a must, and an excellent choice is The Inn at Whitewing Farm, a lovely, historic farmhouse inn complete with cows, horses and swans and an afternoon tea for guests that rivals the Ritz-Carlton in Boston. It's not far from Chadds Ford in tiny Kennett Square (rates from $135 to $279 including country breakfast and afternoon tea; 610-388-2664; www.whitewingfarm.com).

Schools can't stay within Prop. 2-1/2

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Budget season has begun in earnest for fiscal 2007 for both the town and school department.

Town Manager Bill Griffin presented a balanced budget to selectmen and advisory committee Tuesday, which stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 — the state's cap on the amount a town can raise its tax levy each year.

His recommended fiscal 2007 budget figure is $32,867,188, which is $1,142,445 more than the fiscal 2006 appropriation. Griffin's budget includes increases for all town departments and the school department.

This is the first operating budget to be fully prepared by Griffin, as he came on board at the end of January 2005. Griffin said his philosophy for preparing budgets is to come up with a bottom-line figure that stays within

Route 3 traffic summit is held

Traffic lights could be in store for two Rte. 3A locations. MassHighway has endorsed installing traffic signals at both the Greenbush station and the King Street intersection, much to the surprise of MBTA and town officials.

At a traffic summit held Friday, Jan. 6 at Town Hall, more than 20 officials from state and local government participated in a roundtable discussion to iron out some of the questions regarding how to handle traffic for Cohasset's portion of the Rte. 3A corridor.

The meeting was coordinated by planning board vice chairman Peter Pratt, as a means of getting all the major players — including representatives from the MBTA, MassHighway, state Rep. Garrett Bradley and a representative for state Sen. Bob Hedlund, developers of proposed 3A projects, and members from town government — in the room at the same time.

Beth Sternala feels right at home

Is first assistant principal at the middle school

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Beth Sternala, who is the first-ever assistant principal of the middle school, has always loved going to school. Whether as a student, teacher, or administrator, Sternala says she anticipates learning something new each day.

Sternala comes to Cohasset with her bachelor's degree in psychology and education from Colgate University and her master's degree in administration from Harvard University. She said when she decided to pursue her bachelor's degree, she settled on the double major not only to be well-versed in education, but also to help her understand what it means to be an adolescent from a psychological standpoint.

In her senior year at Colgate, Sternala completed her student teaching in a fourth-grade classroom and the following summer, she taught at Summerbridge Cambridge, a year-round, tuition-free academic program that provides middle school students with classes and activities, while training high school and college students for careers in education. Sternala also completed an internship at Philips Academy in Andover over the course of three summers during college.

Yacht club defends actions

Members-only meeting addresses embezzlement scandal

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Behind the scenes Cohasset is still abuzz with the scandal at the yacht club involving the non-profit's long-time accountant, Davenport B. "Dave" Crocker, Sr.

Off-the-record phone calls to the Mariner, talk among friends over coffee and whispers in village shops or while standing in line at the local bank or dry cleaners – are full of a mix of outrage, embarrassment and disbelief.

How could a long-trusted financial advisor from an old Cohasset family double as an alleged embezzler from the organization in which he'd been a member since birth?

The general consensus seems to be the yacht club is less guilty of being an "old boys club" and more guilty of being naïve in thinking that oversight and checks and balances in its accounting practices could be covered by a theoretical handshake from a trusted friend.

Members of the yacht club are saying very little publicly about Crocker, 69, who is also alleged to have stolen funds from the Hingham-Hull Rotary Club. Crocker has admitted to stealing more than $425,000 from the yacht club's coffers.

Last Thursday's well-attended, private meeting at the Lightkeepers Residence for yacht club members only was reportedly a no-holds-barred, frank discussion about what happened, why the club struck a "deal" with Crocker rather than seek prosecution or civil damages, and what safeguards the club has in place to ensure its finances won't be pilfered in the future.

Club officials looked at either suing Crocker for damages or involving the police, but both options would have taken months, even years, and the club would have no guarantee it would get its money back.

The press was not allowed in, but according to several people who did attend, Commodore F. Wisner Murray said members of the executive board's "heads were spinning" when, after they approached Crocker about some cash-flow issues last fall, he admitted to having stolen the money.

Pratt to seek second term on planning board

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Peter Pratt has pulled nomination papers and will seek a second term on the planning board. Nomination papers became available last week at the Town Clerk's office.

"As my first five-year term on the planning boards comes to an end, I have decided to seek re-election to the position," Pratt said this week. "I'm pleased that during my first five years, we were able to address critical issues facing Cohasset's future such as the large home review bylaw to better protect our residential neighborhoods, the 55-plus senior housing bylaw which is now producing the first affordable units in the town in 20 years, completion of the Master Plan draft to give us a framework for preservation of Cohasset's character and resources, and new initiatives for managed growth on Route 3A and in the village.

"I'm pleased that during my first five years, we were able to address critical issues facing Cohasset's future..."
— Peter Pratt

"I seek a second term on the planning board, given that I think each of these areas needs far more work, as does a better effort to enforce our bylaws and better coordinate the planning and permitting work of all our town boards."

Pratt joins other incumbents, water commissioner John McNabb; sewer commissioner John Beck; and Peggy Chapman of the board of health, who have pulled papers indicating their interest in seeking reelection.

As the Mariner went to press, no one had pulled papers for selectman or school committee. Incumbent selectman Michael Sullivan and school committee member Rick Flynn are not seeking reelection. Political newcomer Elizabeth Baker had pulled papers for the board of library trustees.

Nomination papers for the 2006 annual Town Election are available at the Town Clerk's Office at Town Hall. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, Feb. 16.

In order to hold an elected office, a potential candidate must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that a person is not running for office until he or she takes out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies the signatures collected on the nomination papers. Positions available for the 2006 town election include:

- Selectmen - One for three years
- School Committee - Two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - Three for three years
- Assessor - One for three years
- Board of Health - One for three years
- Cohasset Housing Authority - One for five years
- Planning Board - One for five years
- Recreation Commission - One for five years
- Sewer Commission - One for three years
- Water Commission - One for three years

Friday, March 10 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting to be held on Saturday, April 1, and for the Annual Town Election to be held on Saturday, April 8.

Man with gun charged after domestic disturbance

On Monday, Jan. 9, at about 11:06 p.m., the Emergency Dispatch Center at the Cohasset Police Department received a call from 589 Jerusalem Road reporting a domestic disturbance in progress.

Cohasset police officers responded to the scene. On scene they were able to determine from witness statements that probable cause existed to arrest a white male by the name of Kevin Barry, date of birth 11/23/49, of 589 Jerusalem Road, for assault and battery (domestic violence).

Cohasset police then set-up a perimeter and called for a K-9 from the State Police to assist in the search for Barry.

There was further information from witness statements on scene that Kevin Barry was armed with a gun and had fled into the adjacent wooded area in the 500 block of Jerusalem Road.

Cohasset police then set-up a perimeter and called for a K-9 from the State Police to assist in the search for Barry. At about 11:55 p.m., and before the K-9 arrived, Cohasset officers located Barry in the rear yard of 589 Jerusalem Road. He surrendered to officers and was taken into custody without incident.

Subsequently, a loaded 40 caliber handgun was recovered from the area. Barry was held at the Cohasset Police Department overnight on $10,000 cash bail. He was arraigned on the following charges at Quincy District Court on Tuesday morning:

- Assault and battery
- Intimidating a witness
- Threats to commit a crime.

Tide gate debate is slated for future agenda

Chairman of the harbor health committee Karen Quigley sent a letter to the board of selectmen asking it to consider petitioning the Army Corps of Engineers to adjust the winter and summer settings of the self-regulating tide gates, to increase the amount of saltwater flow into James Meadow.

Quigley stated the present settings do not allow sufficient saltwater flow to preserve the saltwater marsh, nor mitigate the ongoing growth of phragmites in the meadow. "The habitat for marine plants and animals has been severely impacted already. The phragmites continue to lay in silt, building up the level of the marsh, thus ever increasing the amount of salt water influx needed to be effective in eradicating this invasive, destructive, and dangerous (fire hazard) plant."

However, Quigley had also contacted Greenbush liaison Tom Gruber about the matter, and he feels there is not enough evidence to support her claims. In a letter back to Quigley, he stated the gates have not yet been adjusted for winter conditions per a request from Tutela Engineering which designed the gates. In addition, "Control of phragmites by flooding with saline water is only effective during their four-month growing season. So, whether they are flooded in the winter will have little or no effect on their control," he stated.

In light of the conflicting opinions, selectman Gary Vanderweil said the harbor health committee should come in to give an update to the board anyhow, and it can explain the issues it has with the tide gates at that time. He said it had been his understanding allowing even three more inches of water in through the gates could pose problems for homeowners in the surrounding area. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would put the matter on an upcoming meeting agenda.

Griffin, schools are way off on fiscal 2007 figures the limits of 2-1/2, and selectmen would be responsible for deciding whether that practice becomes policy.

Griffin's budgeting style takes away the need to amend a budget if an override fails. He said in the past, the town has passed budgets at Town Meeting which include override figures and if they fail, the budget must be amended at a second Town Meeting. He said by passing a balanced budget first, it can always be amended to increase the spending, which often gives voters a better understanding of what they will pay for with that increase.

Griffin said he has not yet formally met with members of the school department to discuss its budget and he has not received any definitive numbers to work with. He said he understands the school department is in the process of working through its budget exercises and he should have its numbers soon.

"I'm working in a very detailed way with the town budget and in very round numbers with the school department" at this point, Griffin said.

The most recent figure the school department provided to Griffin is a recommendation of $13,961,991. That figure would be an increase of $1,617,609, or 13.1 percent from the school department's budget in fiscal 2006. The increase anticipates offsets in the amount of $81,000 from athletics, $150,089 in circuit breaker money, and $86,980 in METCO funds. The number plugged in for cost of living salary increases for teachers is currently $238,655, but that figure could change because the teachers' contract is still in negotiations.

However, Griffin said his recommended budget for the school department will come up "very short" from what Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh is recommending. Griffin is proposing a school department budget of $12,714,714, which is an increase of $370,332 from last year, or 3 percent. Griffin said there just isn't room in the budget for a $1.6 million increase for the school department, especially when many of the departments in town have total budgets equal to that proposed increase. Griffin is recommending a budget of $1,271,899 for the Department of Public Works; $1,764,982 for the police department; and $1,842,864 for the fire department.

Griffin explained department heads drafted a suggested budget for him to work with, which included everything they felt they needed in order to be able to adequately run their department. From those suggested budgets, he made roughly $900,000 in cuts to ensure he could bring a balanced budget to the selectmen and advisory committee.

Town Manager Bill Griffin is proposing a school department budget of $12,714,714, which is an increase of $370,332 from last year, or 3 percent.

"There are no new positions being supported at this point in my budget," he said, but there is a three-hour increase in the planning board office staff.

While the school department will soon formally provide its numbers for Griffin, as things currently stand, "even half of their request we can't measure up to," he said.

What the school department says

On Dec. 15, Supt. Denise Walsh presented her recommended budget for fiscal 2007, and as of Thursday, Jan. 5, the numbers were still the same.

"We are aware we are not the only department in town and these are difficult financial times," she said, but added, "we can no longer absorb the effects of deferring programs and projects without impact."

Walsh said from year to year, the school department needs a 7 percent increase at minimum just to "maintain the status quo." She said roughly 80 percent of the school department's budget is spent on teacher salaries, and staying within the 2-1/2 percent increase realm, is "impossible without layoffs."

School committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said the state is no longer providing the aid it said it would, and in her opinion, no school can ever manage on 2-1/2 percent increases from year to year. "I don't think there is a school system in the state that can do it," she said.

Member Pam Wilson said she too was disappointed with the amount of money the schools receive. She said at the town level, the funds the schools have been allocated from the town operating budget have been "a very small piece of a very big pie," year after year.

The school department invited principals Janet Sheehan from the Osgood School and Keith Gauley from Deer Hill School to present their proposed budgets for fiscal 2007 Jan. 5. Both proposals coincide with the school department's proposed 13 percent budget increase.

At the Osgood School, Sheehan's budget reflected an increase of 18.5 percent, or $381,791, from fiscal 2006. Sheehan explained $169,128 has been added in new personnel, including two new kindergarten teachers, one physical education/health teacher, one grade two teacher, and one evening custodian.

Enrollment is expected to increase by between 40 and 50 students at the kindergarten level this fall, and to keep kindergarten class sizes at roughly 17 per class, two teachers are warranted. While one of the positions will be for a new full-day kindergarten teacher and the salary will therefore be paid by tuitions of students attending the class, a new half-day teacher will require the school department pay a salary.

Sheehan said the physical education teacher will split his or her time between Osgood and Deer Hill, and having that extra person on hand will allow for more health education as well as physical education classes two times per week.

Sheehan said adding a new custodian will not only help keep the buildings clean, it will ensure someone is at the building at all times, and there is someone available to lock things up at night and make sure the building is secure.

"We're really restoring positions we once had," Sheehan said.

At Deer Hill, Gauley's budget reflected an increase of $171,666 or 8 percent over fiscal 2006. He said it was much easier for him to come in with a lower increase because he does not have the enrollment increase next year that the Osgood School will. "I just happen to be outside the bubble," he said, as Osgood and the middle school will both experience significant increases in enrollment next year.

Gauley's budget includes increasing the physical education and health teaching position which will be a shared cost between Deer Hill and Osgood, as well as one evening custodian, for a proposed new personnel increase of $48,579.

The complete school budget presentation is available on the school district's Web site at www.cohassetk12.org. The school committee will meet again Jan. 19, and middle-high school principal Joel Antolini is scheduled to give his budget presentation. Once his presentation has been made to the school committee, Walsh will provide more solid figures for the town. There will be joint budget meetings scheduled in the future with the school committee, board of selectmen and advisory committee.

Yacht club defends actions

The club immediately sought legal counsel and an accounting firm to conduct a forensic audit of the books.

According to sources, club officials looked at either suing Crocker for damages or involving the police, but both options would have taken months, even years, and the club would have no guarantee it would get its money back. So they decided to seek a settlement with Crocker in which the club says it has already received $200,000 and has a lien on Crocker's condominium in Jupiter, Fla. to get the balance — roughly $260,000 more that includes interest on the stolen funds and the cost of the investigation. Club officials said the investigation was limited to the past seven years because that's as long as the bank retains records.

At the meeting, sources said club officials made it clear, once the theft of funds was discovered, there was no attempt at a cover up or to "sweep this under the rug," and felt it was important that the membership be fully informed. In fact the club was willing to forgo any agreement that precluded it from telling the membership.

"Once the word got out no one thought members would keep it quiet," one source at the meeting said.

After the meeting others said while they were frustrated the club did not immediately go to the police, they could see "both sides." "No one was prepared to deal with a situation like this," a source said.

Murray sent a letter dated Dec. 16 to the entire membership, some 245 families. The Mariner subsequently received a total of five copies, all sent anonymously.

At the meeting it was also made very clear that while the agreement states the club would not initiate or pursue criminal proceedings, there is nothing prohibiting the club from cooperating with the police.

In fact Cohasset police are investigating the yacht club theft in conjunction with the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office and have stated the yacht club leadership has agreed to cooperate fully. Depending on the outcome of that investigation, Crocker could face larceny charges in Norfolk County.

Hingham police, in conjunction with the Plymouth County DA's office, are also investigating Crocker's alleged embezzlement of at least $37,000 in funds from the Rotary.

It is not clear what Crocker did with the money he admitted to stealing from the yacht club and Rotary, although there has been plenty of speculation but nothing that can be substantiated for the record at this time.

One member at the yacht club meeting spoke for others when he said "the club put money ahead of principle" and that the club should have gone directly to the police, according to a source. However, it was made clear the club was trying to act in the best interest of its membership in trying to get the money back. When the theft came to light, there was some concern expressed by club officials about being able to handle the operating expenses of the club once checks were bouncing and the theft was discovered.

At the meeting, yacht club officials said the club has moved forward with more modern, efficient bookkeeping and has hired a CPA as its accountant. Members were assured that the club has instituted an oversight system "with many eyes" that will ensure its treasury is secure.

According to the state licensure bureau, Crocker is not a CPA and was not licensed to do audits. A spokesman for the agency says there is no licensing requirement in Massachusetts to provide basic accounting services as long as the person does not conduct audits.

MassHighway gives green light for Greenbush signal

The meeting proved to be very beneficial as a huge misunderstanding has been cleared up. The town has a mitigation agreement with the MBTA that states it will install a light at the station if MassHighway gives its approval. The MBTA has said repeatedly that MassHighway feels a light is not warranted at the station, and therefore the MBTA changed its plans for the station's intersection. Currently, plans for the station only include installing the conduits for traffic lights.

MBTA engineer Jim Eng said the MBTA is working within a very tight timeframe to build the Greenbush line. He said it is slated to be up and running by next year. However, the mitigation agreement still says his organization plans to provide traffic lights for the station, if MassHighway gives its approval. Eng said some money was pulled out of the train budget when MassHighway said it did not support the light.

But MassHighway's District 5 Director Bernard "Skip" McCourt said his organization does not have a problem with installing a light, especially in light of the recent addition of a walking and bike path in conjunction with the rail line that will be located across the street from the station.

Eng said Friday was the first time he had heard any MassHighway representatives speak in favor of a light at the station, and if that was truly the opinion of the organization, he would go back to his designers to consider a redesign of the intersection that would include plans for traffic signals. He said there would be an additional cost for the redesign as well as a cost to run the wires and install the equipment necessary to have functioning lights. It would also cost the organization valuable time.

Fellow MBTA engineer Eric Fleming said it would be a "complete change of the intersection to accommodate a light."

But according to MassHighway, the MBTA has had close to a full year to plan for the addition of a light at the station. McCourt presented the meeting with a copy of a letter he wrote, dated April 28, 2005, which was addressed to Roger Wilson of Cashman Balfour Beatty, the company constructing the Greenbush line. In the letter he states, "With the anticipated heavy use of the Department of Conservation and Recreation bike path, MassHighway is now recommending the installation of traffic control signals at the intersection of Rte. 3A and the Cohasset station drive."

The revelation caused a bit of a stir among those in attendance and copies of the letter were made quickly. Tom Carroll, community outreach liaison for CBB, said he would check with Roger Wilson, whom the letter was addressed to, to find out why the information had not been shared with anyone else. Pratt asked those in attendance if anyone had any idea as to how the municipality should proceed now that McCourt's letter has met the conditions of the mitigation agreement and Cohasset should be on the path to getting the traffic light it was promised.

Greenbush liaison Tom Gruber said even though the mitigation agreement conditions have been met, in his informal conversations with MBTA representatives, he has been told it does not have the money available to install the lights. Gruber said if the matter now goes forward and the MBTA comes back to say it cannot include the lights at the intersection as it had promised, the town will likely enter into the dispute resolution process.

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln addressed the forum about traffic patterns and safety concerns along Route 3A.

King Street

Unlike the neighboring towns of Hingham and Scituate, Cohasset's portion of Rte. 3A is full of commercial development. Some would argue the portion of 3A from the Stop and Shop to where the Greenbush station will be just south of the Hingham line is the most congested portion of the road, and the most dangerous.

Many motorists in town say they will not take a left turn to travel south on 3A out of either Sohier Street or King Street. While Sohier Street has a blinking light, residents say it is ineffective and they would rather turn right and make a U-turn to head south rather than risk being hit by oncoming traffic. There is no signalization at King Street at all, and projects in the pipeline will affect both intersections.

The Avalon 40B housing project, which would have 200 units, is in the works, and its entrance would be located just north of where Sohier Street intersects 3A, across from where Good Sport is currently located. In addition, the town is on the cusp of taking up its first commercial subdivision, dubbed Scituate Hill, and its entrance will be located almost directly across the street from the intersection of King Street and 3A. When the Greenbush line is up and running, it is estimated traffic from Hull will begin traveling up Forest Avenue to King Street to access the Cohasset station, and that will add even more traffic to King Street.

Developers for the proposed Scituate Hill subdivision have said they are willing to work with the town to install a light at the King Street intersection. Property owner Rob Schwandt hired Rizzo Associates to conduct traffic studies of the area and made that information available at the meeting.

Rick Bryant of Rizzo Associates said he has done the traffic work for Stop and Shop, the new Dunkin' Donuts on 3A, some of the work for the proposed Avalon development, and he has done consulting work for the MBTA as well. "We have accumulated a lot of information on this piece of 3A," he said. In his opinion, Bryant said King Street will have approximately 5,500 trips per day once Scituate Hill is fully built. "The volume of traffic justifies the installation of a signal. The existing volume of traffic on King Street warrants it," he said.

Police Chief James Hussey and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln were present for the meeting to give their thoughts on 3A traffic. Hussey said Rte. 3A has more accidents than any other place in town. Particularly the intersections at Beechwood Street — which does have a light — King Street and Sohier Street. "It does eat up our resources," he said.

Speed limit

In addition, Hussey said there are many different postings for speed limits over the length of Cohasset's stretch of 3A and some indicate 50 miles per hour where motorists really should not be going that fast due to the shopping plazas. He suggested the signage be changed to reflect appropriate speed limits for the use of the road.

Hussey said the traffic at lower King Street is horrible during the morning commute due to the lack of a traffic light, and he said on many occasions, he has been traveling to the department in the morning and will get out of his car to direct traffic to help clear the tie-ups. He said currently, on a typical day without the train and without a traffic light, it can be very difficult for people to get where they are going.

Chief Lincoln said in 2004 (the latest year for which he had all the statistics compiled) there were 78 car accidents on Rte. 3A or streets which traveling on 3A is required to respond to the incident. He said that means 57 percent of the total accidents in 2004 were on 3A or abutting streets. There were 261 other emergencies which took place in the 3A area, which is a total of 21 percent of the total emergency runs. He said traffic does get backed up on 3A, and "It does affect our ability to respond to calls."

Jim Eng of the MBTA goes over some documents during the traffic summit that dealt with the need for a light at the Greenbush train station.

Action items from traffic summit

- Bring forward new signage on Rte. 3A in light of Chief Hussey's concern that speed limits are posted which are too fast in light of the surrounding shopping centers. In addition, both the police and fire chief will report regularly on the accidents and emergency runs related to Rte. 3A.
- Paper flow and deadlines will be more closely monitored, as the letter from MassHighway which indicated it was in favor of a traffic light was somehow lost in the shuffle. Talk of signalization at the Greenbush station will continue with MassHighway and the MBTA.
- Signalization for King Street in relation specifically to the proposed Scituate Hill commercial subdivision will be discussed on an ongoing basis.
- The town should work with Hingham and Scituate on a master traffic plan for the stretch of the 3A corridor that runs through the three towns.

HANOVER AUTO DEALER ANNOUNCES MASSIVE LIQUIDATION: PRE-OWNED VEHICLES TO BE SOLD FOR JUST $29 DOWN* & $99*/MONTH

Area Residents Express Disbelief. Dealer Confirms vehicles will sell for $29* Down To Help Liquidate 2 Hanover Dealerships of Recent Trade-Ins, Off-Lease, Service Loaners & Demos by January 16th!

HANOVER, MA - Rob McGee, Dealer Principal of The McGee Family of Dealerships in Hanover, announced plans today for a four-day sales event that will feature pre-owned vehicles for as low as $29* down and $99* per month! All the recent trade-ins, lease returns, service loaner vehicles and dealer demos at his two New car stores on Route 53 must be liquidated by Mid-January. This massive 4-Day vehicle liquidation is scheduled for this Friday, January 13th thru Monday, January 16th. The mandatory markdown will take place daily, regardless of any weather conditions that may arise. McGee offers a simple explanation for this unprecedented sale. "We've had record sales at our New car dealerships in Hanover, due in part, to recent Manufacturer Pricing programs. As a result we are now severely over-stocked with hundreds of late-model, low mileage trade-ins, most with the remainder of the manufacturer's warranties still in effect." He adds, "During this massive liquidation I have authorized my entire Management and Sales Staff to sell as many of our Pre-Owned vehicles as possible for just $29* down and only $99* per month to clear out remaining inventory by Mid-January. In addition, during these 4 days we will give every buyer Free Oil Changes for 2 years plus Free Tires for Life. As you can see I am committed to doing whatever it takes to liquidate our entire inventory of pre-owned vehicles by Mid-January, even if people have had serious credit problems in the past. We've arranged for several local bank representatives to be on-site each day to assist those with past credit issues. We can finance anyone", he states.

He also points out that in most instances their prices may be thousands lower than wholesale auction prices. "Current automotive market conditions indicate that the best values exist in the pre-owned market. The recent surge in new vehicle sales has created a surplus of pre-owned vehicles leading to a rapid decline in the prices of like-new vehicles. It couldn't be any better for pre-owned vehicle shoppers." Expect to purchase a quality used vehicle at the lowest possible price, including several vehicles, priced as low as $2,988. *There will be an enormous selection of vehicles to choose from, including Volkswagens, Jeeps, Hondas, Mercedes-Benz, BMW's, Lexus, Infiniti, Fords, Chevrolets, Buicks, and many more.

"Due to Record-Breaking Sales At Our Two New Car Stores In Hanover We Have A Huge Surplus of Trade-Ins that Must Be Liquidated."

Rob McGee - Dealer Principal

Remember, interest rates are still at an all time low but are poised to rise in the near future. "Most of all, between our 2 Hanover dealerships, we've got over 2 million dollars worth of inventory - that's over 500 pre-owned cars, trucks, minivans and sport utility vehicles to choose from. It can't get any better for the serious auto buyer".

For auto shoppers looking for a very low cash price there will be many choices, including a 2000 Buick LeSabre Custom, loaded, pwr package, A/C, CD, for just $29* down and $99* per month. Sample payments will be clearly marked on all vehicles. All you'll need to do is obtain credit approval, pick a vehicle and a payment. It's that simple.

"As Mid-January approaches we must sell off as many used vehicles as possible or pay hefty sums to ship them to auctions all throughout the Northeast," says McGee.

He cites another example, a 2000 VW Beetle, auto, pwr package, A/C, C/D, only 53k miles, for only $29* down and $99* per month. For those auto shoppers looking to trade their current vehicle, all trades are welcome, paid off or not. You won't want to miss this unique opportunity to purchase a pre-owned car, truck, minivan, sport utility, luxury or economy vehicle with an unbelievably low down payment of just $29* and monthly payments of $99 per month*! He reminds prospective buyers to act quickly if they want to take advantage of these incredible savings. "I can't stress enough that this liquidation sale is for Four Days Only." Once the 4 day event is over all remaining pre-owned vehicles must be shipped to auction. All vehicles will be offered on a first-come, first-served basis, so it's critical to come early to have the best chance of getting the vehicle you want.

Those wishing to beat the rush should shop early and take advantage of our extended sale hours over these four days at McGee's Pre-Owned Center in Hanover, located directly on Route 53 (1 mile south of the Hanover Mall and Route 3).

Jenkins talks to classes about engineering field

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When sitting down to watch their favorite television program via a satellite television network, students in four Cohasset High School classes will now have a better understanding of how the signals travel to their home from space.

Thanks to engineer Jessica Jenkins — a graduate of the Cohasset High School Class of 1995 who returned to the school Dec. 21 to give students an inside peak into her profession — students are now more aware of the many ways engineers impact our everyday lives. Jenkins provided them with a crash course in the many different kinds of engineering careers they could pursue.

"There are lots of opportunities for engineers. There are a lot now, and there will be even more when you graduate from college," said Jenkins, who is an aerospace engineer for Lockheed Martin in California. Her company works on many different engineering projects, including satellites and space stations for NASA, and top-secret endeavors for the government.

Jenkins volunteers at schools whenever she can to help promote engineering through the "Discover 'E'" (E is for engineering) program. Engineers who participate in the program help grade school and high school students relate engineering to the world around them. Jenkins typically visits schools in California where she currently lives, but wanted to return to her alma mater while she was home for the holidays visiting her parents Leonora and Leland Jenkins of Jerusalem Road.

Jessica attended Cohasset schools from kindergarten through grade 12, except for junior year, which was spent studying abroad in Switzerland. She was valedictorian of the Class of 1995, a Massachusetts AP scholar, and a National Science Scholar winner.

Jenkins holds a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from Northwestern University in Chicago and her masters of science degree and engineer's degree in aeronautics and astronautics from Stanford University in California. Her graduate research was conducted at the NASA Ames Research Center in California's Silicon Valley.

Jenkins eased the students in David Ames' class into their engineering conversation by playing a game to get them engaged. She asked students to name anything they could think of that engineers would develop, and in return, they were rewarded with a piece of candy. Jenkins explained the different roles of the five major types of engineers, and which kind of engineers would work on the different ideas they came up with.

Aerospace engineers, which Jenkins is by profession, work on projects like satellites, stealth fighters for the military, missiles, and space shuttles. Chemical engineers work on things like food items, and Jenkins explained they "make it healthier, taste better, and last longer." They also work on petroleum products, making gasoline safer for cars as well as the environment.

Civil engineers build things like bridges, and Jenkins used the Sydney Harbor Bridge in Australia and the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco as two examples of outstanding civil engineering. She also talked about electrical engineers and the new technology that is always being improved for appliances such as televisions and refrigerators, as well as electronics like cell phones.

PHOTOS/SAMANTHA BROWN

Member of the CHS Class of 1995, Jessica Jenkins, holds an air compressor used during an engineering demonstration she gave in science teacher David Ames' class Dec. 21. Jenkins returned to the school for the day to share her experiences working as an aerospace engineer for Lockheed Martin in California, and hopefully spark an interest in engineering for the students.

Jenkins received her bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering, which means projects such as submarines, ships, and cars are all in her area of expertise. Her skills in mechanical engineering, combined with her aerospace engineering degree have brought her to a point where she is helping design major projects for Lockheed Martin. Lockheed Martin works on projects such as designing solar panels for the International Space Station, and also makes military satellites, some of which are bigger than a school bus.

Her company also designs geo-synchronous satellites that are far enough away from the Earth that they are able to move at the same speed. Those are the kinds of satellites used for satellite TV. She added those satellites typically have a life span of 10 years. At the end of their use, they are pushed off their course and typically float away in the direction of the sun. She said there are likely 500 or so satellites currently working in orbit.

Gordon Smith, Danny Brady, and Owen Landon work together to try to catapult a piece of candy as far as they can, while engineer and former CHS student Jessica Jenkins looks on. The three students were given the task of working together to come up with an engineering design that would launch the candy farther than the designs of their classmates.

The students asked Jenkins what she is currently working on, but that information is top-secret. "I work on a classified project," she replied, but gave them a very small hint when she said, "it's going to help keep you all safer. Especially if you join the military."

But as for her day-to-day routine, Jenkins said she works with a team of roughly 120 engineers. "There are a bunch of little teams and we all make up a big one," she said. With that being said, it made sense that Jenkins would have the students break up into small teams to carry out an engineering feat: which group could come up with the best means of moving a piece of candy across the room using only potential energy, not kinetic. That meant no throwing the candy across the room, which sparked their creative juices.

Students were given a variety of materials to work with including scissors, tape, two paperclips, three straws, a piece of cloth, some cardboard, about 30 feet of string, and a rubber band. In the end, there were two distinct designs used by the students. Some groups used the rubber band to pull back and launch the candy, while others found a way to slide the candy on a string across the room.

At the end of the class, Jenkins left the students with some engineering pamphlets as well as bookmarks. She surprised students when she told them during her time at CHS, current principal Joel Antolini was her "shop" or technology arts teacher, and his classes sparked an interest that led her to where she is today. She encouraged students to work hard in their math and science classes, and one day they too could be charting a course for the future in one of the many exciting fields of engineering.

Donors bolster efforts for new animal shelter

By Jillian Fennimore
JFENNIMO@CNC.COM

Pet lovers everywhere are working harder than ever to fetch the funds for the Scituate Animal Shelter.

Friends of the Scituate Animal Shelter are out of the doghouse and getting closer to its goal of raising $834,000 by the end of February to relocate its building to a four-acre spot on the Route 3A Farm.

Right now the group has met its mark of raising more than $500,000.

"We are on a roll. Once we hit the milestone of half of a million dollars there's no stopping us now."

— Nancy Testa, Friends of the Scituate Shelter

Carol Ann Green of Pride Mortgage in Hingham, with her bull dog Nicki, is donating a portion of her annual salary to help raise funds for the Scituate Animal Shelter.

"We are on a roll," said Nancy Testa, Friends of the Scituate Shelter chairperson. "Once we hit the milestone of half of a million dollars there's no stopping us now."

And the generosity continues for the shelter as donations continue to flow in, despite the roadblocks the shelter has faced along the way.

In November, members of the Scituate Animal Shelter and the Driftway Animal Hospital found that their fundraising containers were stolen right off the counters of their businesses.

For Carol Ann Green, a loan officer at Pride Mortgage in Hingham, this is what sparked her to pitch in.

"I was flabbergasted," she said about hearing of the unfortunate loss. "These people have been working so hard to raise this money."

So Green decided to kick in a little of her own, promising 5 percent of her 2006 salary to the support the shelter during their time of need.

Since Green's income runs on a commission basis, her donations will vary each month. If needed, she will make a commitment to donate some of the money upfront to make ends meet.

A pet owner herself — she has an 8-year-old bulldog named Nicki — Green said she wanted to do what she could to give the shelter's animals a better home.

"It's a terrible thing to think someone would steal money from homeless animals and the people that work so hard to care for them," she said. "But now we must look forward and do whatever we can to ensure that the shelter is able to achieve its goals and maintain the level of integrity and compassion that it has provided our communities for the past 14 years."

Friends of the Scituate Animal Shelter have been collecting money for the past seven years or so to support the shelter's general fund of the no-kill shelter, used to pay for the everyday necessities such as food for all the pets and litter for the cats. The shelter serves not only Scituate but also the communities of Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Hull.

Friends of the shelter got voter approval in October, allowing the town to sell the existing shelter building on the Driftway to help fund the new facility which along with the land purchase will come at a cost of $1.6 million.

The current shelter will be sold under a minimum sealed bid for $375,000.

The new 2,500-square-foot facility proposed is needed to accommodate the growing number of stray, homeless, injured, and surrendered companion animals, according to the shelter's Web site.

Tax deductible donations are also welcome and should be sent to the "Shelter 3A Farm Fund" P.O. Box 823, Scituate, MA 02066. For more information, call the Shelter at 781-545-8703.

Cut-A-Thon to benefit Shelter Relocation Fund

K.A. Ricco Designs in Scituate Harbor has scheduled a Cut-A-Thon for Sunday, Jan. 29, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. to benefit the Scituate Shelter's 3A Farm Relocation Fund. The Shelter serves Hingham, Norwell, Cohasset and Hull as well as Scituatue.

Wet cuts will be $25, cash or checks only. Finger foods will be served. All proceeds benefit the Shelter's relocation fund.

Please call 781-545-7772 to make an appointment. Walk-ins are welcome but reservations are recommended.

EDITORIAL

No winners here

It would be so nice to turn back the clock when a handshake was all that was required to guarantee a loan because a person's good name and character were paramount.

But, sadly, we live in a different world — one that the venerable Cohasset Yacht Club — a place that relied on "past practices" for want of a better term when it came to its finances, has been literally thrust into.

How can upwards of $427,000 go missing and not be "noticed" for years? There had to be some signals. Were club officers concerned about being impolite and therefore never asked about certain irregularities? Or were they just simply naive in assuming one of their own would have their best interests at heart?

According to sources at the yacht club, Davenport Crocker Sr., a man from an old, respected Cohasset family whose father – a noted sailor – signed his son up at birth, was a trusted friend. It appears that was all that was needed for the club to allow Crocker to manage its money with virtually no oversight.

It all sounds so quaint and "Andy of Mayberry-ish." But the reality is, no one in a financial position for any company or non-profit organization should serve without a sound system in place to prevent exactly this type of criminal activity from occurring. Clearly the commodores and leaders at the club needed to step up to the plate years ago to protect the membership that paid its dues in good faith.

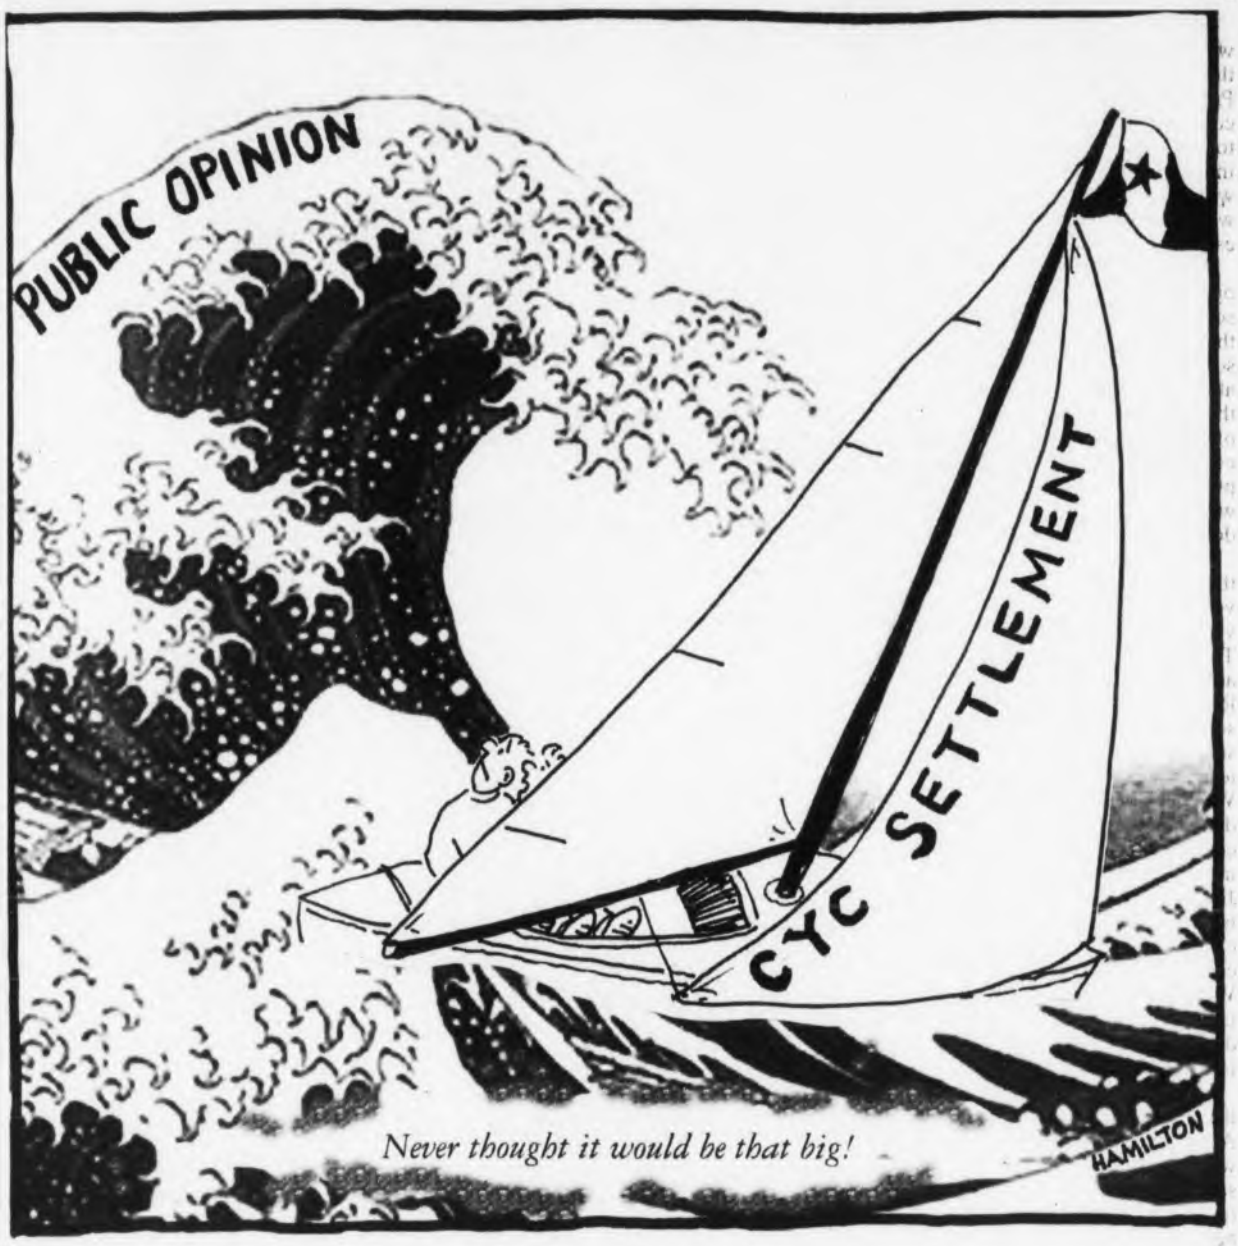
The yacht club has come to realize this the hard way. Not only has it experienced the theft from its treasury, but once the matter became public knowledge, it has had to endure considerable embarrassment and be accountable to hundreds of members who pay hefty annual fees and mooring charges.

Going forward, the club has now put in place "modern" accounting practices to ensure this cannot happen again.

Once the magnitude of the theft came to light, the CYC, in the interest of serving its membership and getting its money back, did not go to the police, although we understand the club is cooperating with the investigation.

Now that police are investigating, the issue is unlikely to go away. Mr. Crocker, who is alleged to have also stolen from the Hingham-Hull Rotary Club, could face larceny charges in two counties.

This whole incident serves as an unfortunate reminder to all of us that times are different — we have to keep tabs on those we entrust to work for us.



Cook Estate RFP #3 available Wednesday

The board of selectmen made its final changes to the third Cook Estate Request for Proposals Tuesday. The RFP outlines the specifications the town would like to see in any projects build on the Cook land off Sohier Street.

Among the changes in this latest draft is the decision by the board to put more weight on moderately priced units, which will fulfill a need for Cohasset seniors. It recently came to the board's attention that most Cohasset seniors would not qualify for affordable housing units — rental or ownership — due to the fact that selling a home in Cohasset will leave seniors with too much money to pass the asset test.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the required notice of the Cook RFP will appear in the Central Register, published weekly by the secretary of state, on Wednesday, Jan. 18. Proposals for the project will be due by Friday, Feb. 17.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pedestrian rules are ignored

TO THE EDITOR:

It is amazing how many walkers and joggers continue to walk or jog with their backs to the traffic, blissfully unaware of risks from careless drivers, drivers on their cell phones, drivers blinded by the sun, drivers with poor eyesight, etc.

Commonsense, and the recommendations of police and other authorities who deal with pedestrian injuries, tells us to walk or jog facing the traffic. Not only is the pedestrian's face more visible than his or her back, but the pedestrian has more chance to see the errant vehicle and move aside in time.

The ultra in foolishness is walking or jogging in the evening, back to traffic, wearing dark clothes. The ultra ultra is doing it on a street beside a serviceable sidewalk.

It's not just the business of the pedestrian; we all bear the cost of higher insurance premiums and indirect taxes that result from needless injury. A motorist who, in a moment of inattention or blinded by the sun or oncoming lights, injures a pedestrian, is a victim too.

Well, that's my nag for the week.

Community Blood Drive scheduled for Feb. 1

Since 1970, January has been recognized as National Blood Donor Month. At this time, donations of all blood types are needed to meet the needs of patients in local hospitals as well as those throughout New England. To help ensure an adequate blood supply, the American Red Cross once again joins with the Town of Cohasset in the hope that residents will take some time out of their busy lives to give the Gift of Life. This year's Red Cross Blood Drive will be held Wednesday, Feb. 1, at St. Anthony's Parish Hall, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, from 1 to 7 p.m. Childcare will be available from 3 to 5 p.m. All donors will receive an entry into the weekly "Warm Your Heart" drawing for $200 toward monthly heating costs.

According to Joanne Newton, New England Region CEO, the need for blood is constant, and volunteer blood donors contribute to nearly all the blood used for patient care in the U. S. "If all who are eligible to donate would do so on a regular basis, three to four times per year, blood needs could be met and shortages could become a thing of the past," Newton noted.

Everyone, whether it is realized or not, depends on blood. Every two seconds, someone needs blood. Each day, patients across the country receive approximately 38,000 units of this lifesaving resource. This year, as many as five million patients will require blood transfusions as accident victims, people undergoing surgery, and patients receiving treatment for leukemia, cancer and other diseases.

To give blood, potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in good health. Most medications and medical conditions do not prohibit a person from being a blood donor. Donors can give blood safely every eight weeks. To make an appointment to donate call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 781-383-1290, or the Red Cross Blood Services at 1-800-448-3543, or visit www.givelife.org. For information on the blood donation process and current eligibility guidelines visit www.newenglandblood.org.

Sohier, Pleasant streets to close soon

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

We've mentioned before and we'll say it again — the only thing that is constant on the Greenbush Project is the fact that it changes constantly. Crossings that are going to close don't close and other crossings are now higher priority and will close. Listen carefully and we'll do our best to tell you the latest plans.

First, King Street may be able to open at the end of this week or sometime next week, depending on the weather. The weather has been so mild, that the project has been able to get much more work done than they had anticipated. Even all of the paving is expected to be completed. We have included a photo of the King Street crossing waiting for the final paving to be done.

When King Street is reopened, the MBTA will close Sohier Street very shortly thereafter. Please be very careful with this closure. There about 70 homes whose only access from Sohier will be through Route 3A. Similarly, school buses serving Osgood and Deer Hill schools as well as parents and teachers will need to use Route 3A. We have asked the MBTA to have duty police at the Sohier/Route 3A corner to assist traffic at this very messy intersection. Police Chief Jim Hussey will be in charge of the traffic detail deployment and any changes to the traffic details at this corner must be approved by him. We suspect that this traffic assistance will be required each school day until the Sohier Street crossing is reopened.

We were also told by the MBTA that the crossing at the Glastonbury Abbey on Hull Street (Route 228) was also about to be closed for construction on Jan. 23rd. Their goal is to have this construction completed before the summer traffic to Nantasket Beach in Hull. Clearly, having Hull Street closed at the same time as Sohier will further stress the Route 3A-King Street intersection. Now, we hear that the underground construction is not as complicated as they originally thought, so this closure can be delayed. We do guess that Hull Street will need to be closed before Sohier Street is opened, so we may still have to be concerned with traffic at King Street / 3A.

Police Chief Jim Hussey will be in charge of the traffic detail deployment and any changes to the traffic details at this corner must be approved by him.

Now for the next "good" news. The MBTA notified us on Jan. 10 that it is their intention to close Pleasant Street on the 23rd of January. So, if things go as currently planned, both Sohier and Pleasant streets will be closed at the same time. While Pleasant Street is closed, Smith Place will be open as a detour. Please be very careful and drive slowly on Smith Place because it is a very narrow road in a very congested neighborhood.

The walls of the Rocky Lane bridge approach have started to rise from mother earth. They consist of small precast structures that are being erected in an interlocking jig saw fashion on each side of the bridge approach ramp. Interestingly, we are told that plastic straps will connect to the precast pieces and will anchor into the dirt between the walls. As odd as it sounds, these straps will keep the walls in place. See the photo of these walls as they are this week.

Stay tuned for next chapter.

King Street will be able to open this week or next week depending on the weather; here the King Street crossing is waiting for the final paving to be done.

Hooked on the hookah

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Just when you thought we had the smoking demon on the run, along comes the hookah.

(I know what you're thinking but it's spelled different.)

The hookah is a Middle Eastern water pipe through which smokers inhale fruit-flavored tobacco and it's catching on with the college crowd in such unlikely places as Ames, Iowa, and Salisbury, N.C., where cigars, cigarettes and a chaw of Red Man are frowned upon.

Brennan Appel, director of southsmoke.com which sells hookahs, says the pipe is offered in about 1,000 cafés and restaurants across the nation...

This at a time when 39 per cent of our population lives in areas that have more than 2,000 laws that limit smoking in some manner and 118 localities have banned smoking outright in all restaurants and work places and the figure is growing from year to year.

Washington state is considering a statewide ban on smoking within 25 feet of a building that prohibits smoking; Orange County, Calif., not only bars smoking on its beaches but along its entire coast.

The three Iowa Health Systems hospitals forbid its 5,300 employees from smoking anywhere on the premises during working hours so even patients and visitors have to leave the grounds to light up and one hospital covers 44 acres. You'd have to walk more than a mile for a Camel.

"The social norms are changing," says Annie Tegen, spokeswoman for Americans for Nonsmokers Rights. "It's no longer okay to blow smoke in someone's face."

Enter the hookah.

Brennan Appel, director of southsmoke.com which sells hookahs, says the pipe is offered in about 1,000 cafés and restaurants across the nation, usually in establishments that feature Middle Eastern food on the table, Arabic music on the juke box and belly dancing on the stage.

If George W. finds out will he put a tap on their phones? But I digress . . .

Most hookahs are about three feet tall and are smoked for about 45 minutes at a cost of $7 to $10 and, like tobacconist and cigar bars, their shops are exempt from the laws that inhibit smoking across the country; in other words, you can't call the cafes that serve them "puffeasys."

The growing popularity of the hookah is largely due to the fruity taste of the tobacco and the idea that smoke passed through water will lose all the nicotine and tars and other icky things that make smoking bad for you.

Not so, says Thomas Eisenberg, a psychology professor at Virginia Commonwealth University and author of a study of hookahs.

"There's a myth that the smoke is filtered through the water," he told USA Today. "Every risk of cigarette smoking is also associated with water pipes. The first time I ordered one it smelled like cherry cough drops. I'm concerned it may introduce young people to nicotine."

A study by the American Cancer Society showed that those who smoked water pipes had five times the risk of lung cancer as those who did not smoke.

At least you'll go with a pleasant taste in your mouth.

Try living today without modern technology

WRITER'S BLOCK

JEFF CUTLER

How about ATMs? Where would you get your money for the weekend? For people who work normal hours, getting to a bank branch during the week is an impossible challenge.

With 2005 fading slowly in the rearview mirror, myriad resolutions still have the innocent freshness of misplaced hope. Fat people have "decided" to become thin and smokers, drinkers and gamblers are all poised to abandon their vices and continue their lives unimpeded by addiction.

While I'm battling a coffee addiction and trying to maintain a healthy abhorrence for exercise, I've decided to pursue a more difficult resolution. I've resolved to examine a life without modern technology.

Put away your sneers and think seriously for a moment about a simpler existence. Think about how difficult your tasks would be and how long it would take to perform many actions we take for granted. Faced with the loss of your modern gadgets and devices, you might worry realistically about your very survival.

For instance, does your day start with a digital alarm clock, a hot shower and fresh coffee? Does your glass of orange juice come chilled from a "water-and-ice-in-the-door" refrigerator? Can you auto-start your car from the window of your living room while you watch the Early Show on DirecTV?

That's just a taste. Where would you be without your cell phone? Aside from not offending people at the bank, movie theater, coffee shop and supermarket, you might develop an anxious twitch without a phone within reach. Heaven forbid you actually lose your cell phone — have you ever tried to recreate your mother's contact info when all you can recall is that she's "speed-dial number 2"?

What about the price scanners at every store in the world? Without technology, would clerks have to press cash-register keys again instead of "bloop-bleeping" each item across a flickering red laser?

How about ATMs? Where would you get your money for the weekend? For people who work normal hours, getting to a bank branch during the week is an impossible challenge. And if we didn't have direct deposit, there'd be more bounced checks than even the smartest ATM could count.

The annual Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in Las Vegas attracts more than 100,000 visitors each year because it offers people a glimpse at the next great technology. This year, monstrous plasma televisions, smart telephones, home computers and interactive entertainment systems top the list of gadgets people are clamoring for. But in our hypothetical world, these "toys" would be gone and so would:

Self-stick stamps; GPS devices; rechargeable batteries; BlackBerrys and Palm Treos; digital cameras; blinking holiday lights; iPods and other MP3 players; blogs; TIVO; anti-lock brakes; Helmet Cams; television screens at airplane seats

Howard Stern on Sirius Satellite Radio; XBox, Playstation and Nintendo GameCube; FedEx, UPS and USPS package tracking; EZ-Pass; auto-shut-off irons; and hand-held Sudoku and other electronic games.

I'm not sure I could live without technology. My gadgets and my connection to the electronic world are a habit, a convenience and a welcome addition to my work and leisure life. I add to my blog regularly to exercise my writing muscles and to share info with friends. I share photos I've taken digitally and I scour the World Wide Web for information on topics to write about.

I often pay my bills online and frequently make purchases via the Internet (this year, I didn't buy any holiday gifts from a brick and mortar store). Truth is, I'm intricately wired to technology and don't know if it would be possible for me to go cold turkey.

In fact, this column was written at a beachfront café on Sanibel Island, Fla. The restaurant had wireless Internet access and a view of the Gulf of Mexico. When I wrapped it up, I used the electronic spell-check and word count. Then I emailed it to the newspaper where it was electronically typeset and then printed in thousands of copies of the paper.

If it weren't for technology, I would have had to hunt and peck this column on my 1930s Royal manual typewriter that sits on my office desk. Then, I would hop on my pony and ride to Community Newspaper Company/South in Marshfield with it where it would be manually typeset and inked onto broad sheets of paper that would be folded and delivered to you.

Before you trim your fat, drop the cigarettes or hop on the wagon, look at giving up technology. Then your particular resolution might seem a little more attainable.

Town housing consultant steps down over potential conflict

Also worked for Cedarmere

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Housing consultant Bob Engler, who impressed members of the board of selectmen with his level of expertise, will no longer be the town's contracted affordable housing specialist.

Due to Engler's history working with Leggat McCall Properties, which is building the Cedarmere senior housing development, Town Counsel advised there is a potential conflict of interest for Engler in his new town role. Engler was hired by the town to work with the to-be-established housing partnership and assist in other key housing issues — namely the affordable housing portion of the Cook Estate project.

The issue was brought to Town Manager Bill Griffin's attention last week. Planning board vice chairman Peter Pratt said he placed a call to Griffin after receiving calls from residents who had attended the senior housing forum Tuesday, Jan. 3, at which Engler appeared. Engler spoke that day about affordable housing to help clear up some of the many misconceptions surrounding the ever-changing rules and regulations set by the Department of Housing and Community Development.

At the meeting, Griffin introduced Engler as the town's new housing consultant, who would be paid using funds allocated at Town Meeting. Griffin had drafted a Request for Proposals for the position, and Engler's was the only response.

Pratt said in his eyes, there was a clear conflict, considering Engler's very recent appearances before the planning board and board of selectmen on Cedarmere's behalf. Cedarmere is a privately-owned project that will be built under the town's Senior Multi-family Overlay Residence District bylaw, and the Cook Estate is a town-sponsored project which will file under the same bylaw.

Engler had argued before both boards that rental units are not successful when mixed with market-rate units, and that Cohasset seniors will not qualify for affordable rental units, in defense of Cedarmere's lack of affordable rentals. The Cook project had rental units as a preference in its first two RFPs. Pratt said there could be both ethical and legal ramifications for the town if Engler was involved in the drafting of the third Cook Estate RFP, and he immediately got in touch with fellow members of the planning board to inform them of the situation.

Griffin said when the questions were raised, he informed Engler and Town Counsel, and Counsel advised Engler to consult the State Ethics Commission. Engler's partner Janet Stearns made that contact and reported back because "there is a chance the firm could be providing consulting services to the town at a time in the future when they would also again be working for Cedarmere on their affordable housing unit lottery, it would be best that they not contract with the town to work with our Housing Partnership Committee and affordable housing plan," Griffin said. Engler withdrew from the position this week.

Pratt said he believes the right actions were taken to protect the legal viability of the third RFP for the Cook project, and to minimize the risk that there would be a challenge to the bid process or to other permitting action that may emerge from the bid process.

"As much as I think they 'did the right thing' in this instance, frankly, the manager and selectmen never should have allowed the Engler firm to come under retention (or whatever the formal status was) to represent the town, considering the fairly clear appearance and probable reality of conflict. I think the town needs to set a new standard for avoidance of conflict situations by public officials and retained professionals," Pratt said.

At the direction of the board of selectmen, Griffin will send out a new RFP for the consultant position next week, after he issues the third RFP for the Cook Project. A new RFP is necessary because with only one bid, the town did not have a second runner-up to fall back on.

Christmas Tree drive a success

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to thank the many Cohasset families who arranged to have the Middle School Student Council collect their used Christmas Trees the weekend of Jan. 7 & 8. We are thrilled to report that we collected a record number of trees raising funds that will directly impact student programming in the Middle School.

The Christmas Tree Drive would not have been possible without the generous support of several community members. We extend huge thanks to: Barry Joseph from Joseph's Hardware and Tim Toomey who both generously loaned trucks on Saturday; Jack Whorley who donated the use of the Teen Garage; Beth Sternala, Assistant Principal and Cynthia Gordon, Student Council Faculty Leader who helped coordinate the Tree Drive; Barbara Canney, Bill Chisholm, Paul Davis, Michael Dick, Mike Gill, Howie Noble, Peter Robinson, and Mark Toomey who donated Saturday and Sunday to drive trucks for the tree pick-up; and the student volunteers who loaded countless trees on and off the trucks.

Thank you all for your part in this great community project!

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: The House and Senate last week officially convened the 2006 legislative session but most of the activity was ceremonial. Both branches met only in brief sessions and there were no roll call votes. Action on important legislation is expected to resume soon.

BHRC this week examines the voting records of local senators on Gov. Mitt Romney's vetoes of items in the $23.9 billion fiscal 2006 budget. The Senate in 2005 voted on 66 of Romney's budget vetoes that reduced state spending and made other changes in the version of the budget approved by the Legislature. A two-thirds vote is required to override a gubernatorial veto. The 39-person membership of the Senate included 33 Democrats and only six Republicans. The governor needed the support of 14 senators to sustain a veto when all 39 senators voted— and fewer votes if some members were absent. This difficult task involved getting the support of all six GOP members and convincing eight Democrats to support him. Romney fell far short of that goal. Nine votes were the most that he received on any veto. The Senate easily overrode all 66 vetoes including 24 that were overridden unanimously.

The vetoes had virtually no support from the chamber's 33 Democratic senators. Twenty-eight of them gave no help to the governor and voted to override all of his vetoes. Four Democrats supported Romney on one veto. Senate President Robert Travaglini followed Senate tradition and rarely voted on roll call votes.

Only one Republican supported Romney more than 50 percent of the time. Republican Minority Leader Brian Lees (R-East Longmeadow) sided with the governor 36 times (54.5 percent). The two GOP members who gave Romney the least support were Sens. Richard Tisei (R-Wakefield) who supported the governor only 14 times (21.2 percent) and Bruce Tarr (R-Gloucester) who sided with Romney 16 times (24.2 percent).

NUMBER AND PERCENTAGE OF TIMES LOCAL SENATORS SUPPORTED ROMNEY

Here is how local senators fared in their support of Romney on the 66 budget vetoes. The record of any senator who was absent for some of the roll calls is based on the number of roll calls on which he or she voted.

The percentage next to the senator's name represents the percentage of times that the senator supported Romney. The number in parentheses represents the actual number of times the senator supported Romney.

39.3% (26 out of 66)

GAY MARRIAGE- Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders (GLAD) filed a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of a proposed constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriages in Massachusetts. The lawsuit argues that the ban clearly violates a section of the constitution that prohibits the introduction of citizen-initiated constitutional amendments that relate to the reversal of a judicial decision like the Supreme Judicial Court one that legalized same-sex marriages. Attorney General Thomas Reilly in September certified the proposal and supporters gathered sufficient signatures to move it along. It now needs the votes of 50 of the state's 200 legislators at a Constitutional Convention in both the 2005-2006 and 2007-2008 legislative sessions in order to appear on the November 2008 ballot. Sponsors of the petition say that the proposal is constitutional because it does not overturn a court decision by nullifying existing same-sex marriages. They argue that it simply prohibits future same-sex marriages. Reilly's office issued a statement arguing that the proposal is constitutional because "it isn't a reversal of a judicial decision but an effort to change the constitution going forward." The statement also noted that Reilly does not support the ban.

ALSO UPON BEACON HILL

SEAT BELTS (H 229) Supporters of a bill providing for primary enforcement of the state's seat belt law announced that they have sufficient votes to approve the measure in the House and Senate. The legislation allows police officers to stop and issue tickets to drivers solely for not wearing seat belts. Current law permits only secondary enforcement and prohibits the $25 fine from being imposed unless the driver is stopped for another motor vehicle violation or some other offense. Supporters at a press conference said that secondary enforcement has not worked and noted that more than one-third of Bay State residents are still not buckling up. They argued that the bill would annually save an estimated 23 lives, prevent hundreds of serious injuries and save more than $160 million in medical and other costs. Some opponents say that the bill is an unwarranted intrusion by the government and police into people's private lives and private cars and argued that drivers should have the freedom to decide whether they want to wear seat belts. They say that the proposal is too broad and would allow police officers to pull over a driver if they "suspect" the he or she is not wearing a seat belt. Others note that this vague new power is tantamount to establishing roadblocks and would lead to random stops and unfair racial profiling. The bill has been defeated in the House three times since 2000.

GUN LICENSE AND ALZHEIMER'S (H 4553)- The Public Safety and Homeland Security Committee approved legislation requiring physicians who are treating patients with Alzheimer's disease or other forms of dementia to make inquiries about whether the person owns any firearms. The physician would then be required to notify the person's local police chief who would take action to revoke any firearm identification cards and remove all firearms.

HIV AND SEXUAL ASSAULT VICTIMS- Gov. Romney filed legislation allowing a victim to request that a suspect indicted for or formally charged with rape or sexual assault be required to be tested for HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases. Romney said that this information would help victims obtain peace of mind or take action to combat the disease. Some opponents say that the bill would violate the rights of defendants who have not even been convicted of a crime. The AIDS Action Committee released a statement opposing the proposal because it does not offer "actual and practical assistance." The statement said that survivors of sexual assault have only 72 hours to decide whether to take the drugs that can prevent HIV infection and noted that the legal system rarely responds that quickly.

MEDICARE DRUG PLAN- A group of senior citizens gathered at the Statehouse to rally support for major changes in the new federal prescription drug plan that took effect on January 1. Protesters called the plan an abomination that has confused and scared senior citizens. They urged state officials to work with the state's Congressional delegation to implement changes to have the drugs administered through Medicare rather than by 44 private companies. Senator Mark Montigny (D-New Bedford) addressed the rally and said that the drug companies would get richer from the plans while seniors continue to be confused and taxpayers get ripped off.

AUTO INSURANCE DISCOUNTS (H 4577)- Gov. Romney signed into law a bill extending through 2006 an existing exemption to the law allowing businesses and groups to participate in group discount auto insurance plans if at least 35 percent of the group's members participate. The exemption waives the 35 percent requirement for any group that received the discount in 2005 and would ensure that these groups receive the same discount in 2006.

Speaker brings message of peace on Martin Luther King Day

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was a man who longed for a peaceful society. That is a dream shared by Clementina Chery, a woman who has dedicated her life to finding the peace within herself and others, as the president and CEO of the Louis D. Brown Peace Institute in Dorchester.

On Monday, Jan. 16, Chery will be the featured speaker at the fifth annual Martin Luther King Day breakfast. From 9-10 a.m., members of the community will honor the memory and achievements of Dr. King during the pancake breakfast, sponsored by the Cohasset Diversity Committee and Cohasset clergy, which will be followed by Chery's roughly one-hour long presentation. A donation of $5 per person and $15 per family is requested.

"She is an extremely powerful speaker," said Connie Afshar of the Cohasset Diversity Committee, who came to know Chery through the Cooperative Metropolitan Ministry program. The CMM helps connect churches and organizations in the suburbs with counterparts in the city, to form cooperative bonds between the two. As a member of the Second Congregational Church's outreach committee, Afshar met Chery at an annual CMM meeting and became enthralled with her personal story.

In 1993, Chery experienced a loss that changed her life forever. Her son, Louis D. Brown, for which the Peace Institute is named after, became one of 98 victims of homicide in the city of Boston that year. Louis grew up in Dorchester, and at just 15 years old, he had already begun making a name for himself as a peacemaker among fellow classmates in the Boston Public Schools. He was always worried about the effect of violence on his peers and on his community. At an early age, he decided to dedicate himself to learning and teaching about violence prevention and peacemaking through the Teens Against Gang Violence program. His future was bright, and he had dreams of becoming the first black president of the United States.

But on Dec. 20, 1993, while on his way to an annual Christmas party with members of Teens Against Gang Violence, Louis was caught in the middle of a gang-related shooting only a few blocks away from his home. He was shot in the altercation and died the next day.

"I remember that very clearly," recalled Afshar, as she had heard about the death in local news coverage. She said she was very struck by the incident, not only because Louis was so young, but because even in his commitment to educating himself and others on violence prevention and the consequences of violence, his life was cut short as a result of one random act. "It always stuck with me," said Afshar.

Clementina Chery, who is the president and CEO of the Louis D. Brown Peace Institute in Dorchester, is the guest speaker at Monday's Martin Luther King Day breakfast.

Chery founded the Louis D. Brown Peace Institute in 1994 to continue the peacemaking legacy of her son. The Peace Institute works in the schools and the wider community and devotes much of its energy to aiding survivors of homicides. It is estimated that for every homicide victim, there are between seven and 10 close relatives deeply affected, and the Peace Institute helps the survivors in many ways. It provides services such as helping with the details of funerals, finding the financial and mental health resources to guide those affected through the grieving process, and helping those affected understand the different facets of the criminal justice system, just to name a few. The Peace Institute actively works as a partner with the city of Boston, the District Attorney's office, and the Legislature to improve the policing and judicial system.

Chery said she is very excited to come to Cohasset and said she already knows the message she will share — God's gift of peace. She said the Peace Institute has seven core principals which provide a solid foundation for finding peace, including love, unity, faith, hope, courage, justice, and forgiveness. She said only when people find the peace within themselves are they able to share it with others.

"I hope it will be engaging for people," she said, adding she intends to share some of the details about her own personal journey.

Chery said she is looking forward to meeting Cohasset residents, who through the partnership with CMM have been so generous to her organization. In fact, she has plans to bring a few families from the Boston area down with her to share the day in Cohasset.

"We have gotten so many gifts," she said, adding every donation is greatly appreciated, and even the basic needs like paper products and tissues are being met. "No matter how small a gift, it is always valued," she said. But the Peace Institute will receive more than just a small donation from Cohasset next week, as 100 percent of the proceeds from the breakfast will be donated to help the organization continue its mission.

The Martin Luther King Day breakfast will be held Monday, Jan. 16 from 9-11 a.m. at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue. Donations are requested in the amounts of $5 per person and $15 per family. There will be activities for children during the breakfast and babysitting will be provided by the Cohasset Middle High School Social Awareness Club. All proceeds from the event will be given to the Louis D. Brown Peace Institute. For more information, please call Connie Afshar at (781) 383-6606.

Middle school has its first assistant principal

The first fall after graduating from Colgate, Sternala taught science at Needham Middle School. "I absolutely loved it," she recalled. She said science, especially at the middle-school level, is a hands-on subject that students can become involved with.

However, knowing teaching in the public schools would require her to go back to school to earn her master's degree, after three years teaching in Needham, Sternala went on sabbatical for one year and attended Harvard University. During that year she completed the necessary coursework to earn her master's degree in administration. She also completed an internship which gave her a "flavor" of middle school administration. "Here I am a year later," she said.

Sternala's first official day on the job was July 1, which allowed her some time to become acquainted with the building and the staff before the school year got under way. During the hiring process, she was brought in for six rounds of interviews "which speaks to the expectations of Cohasset as a community," she said.

Over several years, the school department has been making the transition from a junior/senior school encompassing grades seven through 12, to a middle school — as separate as it can be under the same roof — encompassing grades six through eight. Part of that transition was bringing on a full-time middle school administrator. Now there is one assistant principal at both the middle school and high school, and one principal that oversees both schools.

Sternala has jumped into her new role with both feet. Along with helping to make a smooth transition into a separate middle school — which will include grades six through eight operating on the same schedule and events are more regularly planned for the entire middle school — she would like to see an increase in extracurricular activities and electives for students.

Beth Sternala, assistant principal at the middle school, looks over the criteria for a science project in Mrs. Susan Horigan's six grade class. The project was based on the "Apprentice" where sixth-graders try to solicit money from investors, including creating a brochure and singing a jingle, after demonstrating their rollercoaster.

About new assistant principal

Name: Beth Sternala
Occupation: Middle School Assistant Principal
Age: 26
Education: Bachelor's degree in psychology and education from Colgate University and master's degree in administration from Harvard University.
Hometown: South Hadley, Mass.
Current residence: Hull, Mass.
Marital status: engaged

She would also like to continue the increased communication with parents through updates on the school Web site, telephone messages via the Connect-Ed system, and a middle-school newsletter. She said she hopes to begin offering informal monthly coffee hours with parents, as another way to help encourage the flow of information.

One other goal Sternala said she would like to see accomplished soon, is fixing the middle-school door buzzer enabling the middle school to admit its own visitors. Because school doors are locked during the day, visitors to the middle school must buzz in at the main office, located in the high school, in order to enter the building.

Sternala grew up in South Hadley, Mass., and currently lives in Hull. "It's nice to be close," she said, especially when she has to return to school for meetings in the evening.

When not at school, Sternala said she likes to run and she has competed in marathons. In addition, Sternala is engaged, so getting ready for the wedding is a top priority during her free time. "I like structural work, so event planning is right up my alley," she said. Sternala's husband-to-be is a special needs teacher in Needham whom she met while teaching science in that town's middle school.

Sternala said she also enjoys traveling and said because she keeps in touch with many friends from high school and college, she often takes weekend trips to New York City or Chicago to visit with them. This past summer, Sternala also took a cross-country road trip from Boston to San Francisco with her fiancé and said if the opportunity presents itself, there are many places she would love to visit again.

Pollution worries aired at planning board hearing

Abutters concerned about subdivision disturbing buried oil

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A six-home sub-division slated for 14 acres next to Cedarmere is causing some controversy with neighbors. Wednesday's planning board meeting saw attorneys and even a court reporter recording every word said during the hearing.

But the added attention didn't seem to phase business partners David Calhoun and Tom Ragno, who said they felt they had met every condition set by the planning board and were ready to proceed to the next phase of permitting the project.

Ragno and Calhoun, along with Calhoun's wife Kelli, make up King Taylor Cohasset, LLC, the company which brought the Cedarmere development through the permitting process. They have since sold Cedarmere to Leggat McCall Properties and have purchased roughly 14 acres of land, accessed off South Main Street via Castle Road. The existing house on the land, formerly owned by Charles Flint, will remain as part of the subdivision, and five new homes will be added to the property.

"We're taking one of the largest parcels of land in town off the books, and we're keeping it underpopulated," Calhoun said. The parcel also has access through Cedarmere, as an easement, owned by the former owner of the property, was passed down with the sale.

Abutters in the Mendel Road neighborhood are concerned about the project's potential for spreading hazardous materials. Susan Kent, 3 Mendel Road, said she believes the site could be home to a buried fuel well. She said roughly five years ago, she and her husband built an addition on their house and two years later, oil began seeping into the pipes in her home. She said she had asked Flint, the former owner, for permission to have an expert come onto his property to find where the oil was coming from, but had consistently been denied. She said now that there are plans to build five homes on the property, "There is going to be a lot of moving earth and we don't know what's down there. There could be more."

"We're taking one of the largest parcels of land in town off the books, and we're keeping it underpopulated."
— David Calhoun, King Taylor Cohasset, LLC

Ragno said the property is completely safe and abutters have nothing to worry about during construction. "We wanted to know before we bought it," if there was oil underground, and he said he was told by an expert that it is "highly unlikely any contamination is coming from 215 South Main Street to 3 Mendel Road." He said a letter to that effect should have been sent to the board of health, and he would make sure it had a copy.

From a planning board standpoint, chairman Al Moore said hazardous material on site is not under the board's purview. He said when the planning board approves any site plans, it is always conditioned on the approval of all other applicable boards. Therefore, he said the project would not be approved unless the board of health was satisfied the site was safe.

Planning board member Bob Sturdy added with any construction, if digging begins and anything hazardous is found, all work stops on the project and the state steps in. "This is all taken care of under state law," he said.

However, Kent said she would feel much better if they were proactive about the matter. She said she would rather find out ahead of time that a potential problem exists, rather than find the oil and disturb it, leaving a mess to clean up later.

Attorney Bruce Isadore, who was there along with the court reporter on behalf of an abutter, had concerns of a different kind. He wondered about the legality of the subdivision road, and questioned whether the subdivision had legal frontage and legal access , according to the town's bylaws. King Taylor's attorney Walter Sullivan, said he would be in touch with Town Counsel to ensure all requirements are met.

While the board came close to closing the public hearing on the subdivision, it was kept open to allow for more public discussion regarding the legal issues. The public hearing will remain open and the board will take the matter up again at its next meeting, scheduled for Jan. 25. Please contact the planning board office at (781) 383-3517 for more information.

Skaters get back in win column

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

This season, significant advantages in shots on net has not always equated to wins for the Cohasset High hockey team.

On Wednesday, however, it did. The Skippers outshot Hull 48-11, and also came out on top where it counts most, taking home a 5-2 win.

Senior tri-captain Brian Straughn broke a 2-2 deadlock 2:29 into the third period, collecting a rebound just outside the crease and backhanding it into the net. Fellow captain Mark Bouchard and junior defenseman Conor Holway picked up assists on the play.

Freshman Andrew Smith had a great chance one minute later from pointblank range, but was turned away by the Hull goalie. Straughn got the insurance goal, however, with 4:26 left after taking a pass from junior linemate Austin Lanzillotti (three assists on the night) and beating the Hull goalie low to the right side of the net.

Bouchard put in an empty net goal with 7.2 seconds remaining to account for the final score, with Straughn and Lanzillotti getting assists. Mixed in between Straughn's goals was a key penalty kill, led by Smith, junior T.J. Kennedy and sophomore Charlie Czerkawski.

After watching his team dominate the first period, Skippers head coach Ben Virga said they "got caught up in a checking game" in the second to let the Pirates back into it. The result was a 2-2 game at the second intermission.

"In that third period, we started skating again," Virga said. "Once again, I thought our 'black line'

Lady hoopsters ride a Wave of success

CHS girls top Abington in key SSL game

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

So, are you wondering what has gotten into the water of the Cohasset girls basketball team? So is everyone else.

After a rocky start, spectator's jaws began dropping two weeks ago as the Lady Skippers battled their way to the top of the Holiday Tournament.

But were they ready for a solid team like Abington? Absolutely. And here are the details.

Last Thursday, the Green Wave of Abington strutted into the Cohasset gym with the idea they could wash the Skippers over-board without even trying. Their attitude became their first mistake.

From the opening tip-off, the Skippers sent a clear message. Cohasset was the wrong team to mess with. From freshmen Gabriella Flibbotte's lightning steals to Mia Lieb-Lappen's Shaq-like rebounding, Cohasset ignited the floor.

The Skippers' persistent full-court press worked better than a sea worm on a bait hook.

"We really slowed their offense down with our press," explained senior tri-captain Chelsea Grossman. "Because they had to focus on getting up the court, they couldn't get a rhythm going."

When asked what transformed the team, head coach John Levangie became quite animated

Boys hoops hopes to turn a corner

Near win against Carver leaves coach with optimism

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Against arguably the best club in the South Shore League, the Cohasset High boys basketball team played its best game of the season.

Hosting a Carver team Tuesday night that is undefeated in league play, the Skippers nearly pulled off an upset, ultimately dropping a 40-38 decision. Junior John McCarthy led the Skippers with 12 points. Senior tri-captain Trevor Brady and junior Jeff Brown were not far behind, scoring 11 and 10, respectively.

It was the team defense, though, that most impressed head coach Dorian Bryant. Carver is one of the biggest, most physical teams Cohasset will face all season, and the defense from guys like Brown, John McCarthy, Patrick McCarthy and senior tri-captain Nick Arment nearly led the Skippers to victory.

"As a team, we played extremely well," Bryant said. "Carver is real tough inside. They have long, athletic kids that can hurt you in the paint. As coaches, we were talking constantly about getting your hands up and rotating. I think we did a real good job of that."

Rebounding was also critical, and a number of players got it done in that department as well, led by Brown (seven rebounds) and Arment (six). In general, Bryant says his team has been rebounding better this season. Others who have been contributing in that facet of the game are junior tri-captain Justin Alexander, senior Will Pinkus, and sophomores Jake Cuneo and David Snowdale.

Bryant said he was looking toward the Carver game as a measuring stick for his team. Overall, the Skippers have been far more competitive than last year, which saw its share of lopsided losses. With the exception of last Friday's 61-32 loss to Abington, Cohasset has been in every game so far this year.

Cohasset's Jeff Brown (3) rises up for a jumper during the Skippers' loss in Abington on Friday. The junior forward scored 10 points in his team's near upset of South Shore League favorite Carver.

The second year coach says one of the biggest reasons for that is the leadership his team has gotten from its captains, Arment, Brady and Alexander.

"I think those three guys have been doing a pretty good job with what is still a young team," Bryant said. "From last year to this year, the team is still learning a lot of new faces and are still learning a new system, and they've been doing a good job with it."

The Skippers (2-6 overall, 0-3 league) host Harwich tonight at 5:30, and travel to rival Hull Tuesday for a 6:30 tipoff with the Pirates.

Deja vu for wrestlers

Skippers finish in middle of the pack at NQ tournament

By Ben Libby
CORRESPONDENT

It must seem like a case of deja vu for the Cohasset wrestling team after finishing in the middle of the pack in its second tournament in two weeks.

Finishing eighth out of 18 teams in last Saturday's North Quincy tournament left Cohasset with little to take away from the competition as a team, but a lot as individuals.

As expected, Shane Dorian delivered for his team, finishing second in the 145 weight class. Dorian, who just can't seem to figure out Vinnie Renaut (Plymouth South), lost by pin to Renaut after losing by pin to him in the previous weekend tournament at Marshfield. Renaut was named Outstanding Wrestler for the second consecutive tournament, and Plymouth South again won the team competition.

After the match, Dorian said he remains optimistic he can top Renaut should they meet again.

"He kind of came out of nowhere, but I still feel I can beat him," Dorian said. "I just have to

Tri-meet a success for gymnasts

By Rachel Thomas
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team held their second meet, a tri-meet with Notre Dame and Case last Friday. The results put Norwell in second place with a 126.4 score, which was good enough to defeat Case, who had a 98.9.

Coh-Nor and Notre Dame were quite close in their scores, as Notre Dame only won by a mere four-tenths of a point (with a 126.8 total score). Although Coh-Nor did not come in first place in the meet, outscoring Case was a significant achievement because the two are in the same league.

Coh-Nor's first meet was Dec. 22 against Pembroke, and the competition was again very close. Although the Pembroke team outscored Norwell, it was by only four points, and Coh-Nor was missing one of its strongest competitors in senior captain Lisa Spirito.

The Cohasset-Norwell team quickly recovered and everyone on the team improved their scores significantly in the tri-meet. The all around competitors were Spirito of Cohasset and Erin Kelly of Norwell (also a captain of the team). Coach Amy Maree remarked that Kelly "did exceptionally well as she improved her all around score."

Kelly and Spirito scored 33.2 and 32.4, respectively, in the all-around competition, scores that were vital for the team's success. Cassie Pacella, a Norwell newcomer to the team, competed for the first time and proved herself to be an asset to the team, scoring a 7.2 on floor. Captain CJ Himberg also competed well, as she got an 8.1 on floor and a 7.6 on beam.

Cohasset-Norwell's Juliette Karp tumbles across the mat during her floor exercise routine in the gymnastics team's season opener with Pembroke. The girls split a recent tri-meet with Case and Notre Dame.

All in all, the team was extremely satisfied the outcome of the meet.

"All of the girls on the team did remarkably well, scoring higher than they did in the previous meet," said Maree. "Considering the competition, only losing by .4 was a great accomplishment by these girls."

This Saturday, the team will compete in another tri-meet against Hanover-Rockland and Bridgewater-Raynham. It is expected that the meet will be fairly close between Coh-Nor and Hanover, as both teams have been getting accumulative scores between 120 and 130 points.

Aidan Buick

Voted on by coaches as the South Shore League's best player, and deservedly so. Makes his second straight All-Scholastic soccer team. Finished the season with a remarkable 38 goals, and racked up 15 assists to lead the league in scoring for the second straight season (his 29 points in 2004 also put him first)…Has tremendous field vision and a great scoring instinct…Came up big when it mattered: scored a hat trick on Nov. 6 in first round tournament win over Chatham, and scored the game's only goal two days later in Division 3 South quarterfinal against Norwell…Says the Chatham game was his best of the season…Also had two goals in win over arch-rival Clippers on Sept. 28…Took just about all the re-starts for Cohasset, and was a threat with his long throw-ins in the attacking third…A two-time Eastern Mass. All-Star…Also an All-Scholastic performer in lacrosse, having led last year's Division 3 state finalist in scoring…Four older brothers all starred athletically for CHS: Jamie (football, basketball, lacrosse), Devin (hockey), Ronan (football, lacrosse) and Conor (lacrosse, soccer)…Plans on playing soccer in college…Cohasset coach Rob Leary: "Aidan carried the team throughout the year. He was our overall team leader and our most skilled player."

Stopper - Cohasset

Sam MacDonald

A two-time South Shore League All-Star, MacDonald is one of the more well-rounded defenders you will see in high school soccer…Defensively, consistently saw how an opponents' attack would develop before it happened, and was almost always in proper position for the tackle…Cohasset switched to a diamond defense part of the way through the season, partly in able to take advantage of MacDonald's considerable offensive skills…Could push forward and create offense on the counter-attack…Assisted on teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Aidan Buick's third goal of the game in Nov. 6 first round tournament matchup with Chatham…Also scored what his coach deemed the team's "goal of the year" in the season finale against Scituate, making a run down the length of the pitch and finishing a rebound with the first touch off the side of his foot…Says his last game in a high school uniform against Hanover was his best…Also a member of the CHS ski team…Hopes to play soccer in college, either at the club level or for a Division 3 school…Is looking at a few schools in the area, and plans to study finance and banking…Cohasset coach Rob Leary: "Sam was the team's toughest, strongest player. He and [fellow defender] Trevor Brady were the leaders of our defense."

Gaston Kelly - Junior Forward - Hingham

Earned just about every All-star award he could get and rightfully so. A three-year starting striker, Kelly was named a Patriot League, Eastern Mass. (top pick), All-State, and All-New England All-star for his efforts on the frontline…He was also named the PL MVP this year…The top-scorer over the last two seasons for the PL champion Harbormen (11-0-1), Kelly racked up 45 points on 36 goals, nine assists…To date, Kelly has 95 career points (68 goals, 27 assists) with one season left…Great speed and unbelievable foot skills are what make Kelly so effective, playing mostly on the left wing…His stellar play up front helped the top-seeded Harbormen (21-1-1) knock off Dighton-Rehoboth, Martha's Vineyard, Silver Lake, and Medway to capture their first Div. 2 South title…He also served up the majority of Hingham's corner kicks, assisting on the team's first goal in a tough 3-2 double-OT state semifinals loss to eventual state champs Stoneham…Kelly also runs indoor track at HHS and is a year round soccer player.

Colin Lincoln - Senior
Midfielder - Hingham

One of those guys who you could always ask to come through in the clutch and he always did…Playing on the right wing, Lincoln tallied 35 points on 19 goals, 16 assists, helping the Harbormen (21-1-1) win the Patriot League title…More importantly, the PL All-star racked up four goals in the post-season Div. 2 South tourney, including two in a quarterfinal victory over Martha's Vineyard…The No. 4 pick as an Eastern Mass. All-star, Lincoln also scored the game-winning goal in the top-seeded Harbormen's 2-1 semifinal win over rival Silver Lake…A composed, strong player, Lincoln's play helped guide Hingham to the Div. 2 South title, topping Medway, 1-0, for the program's first Sectional crown…For his efforts, he was named the MVP…Lincoln would like to continue his soccer career at the University of Richmond. Hingham coach Ken Carlin: "He scored a lot of clutch goals this year. When we needed him, he delivered. He had a great year."

James Wilson -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Hingham

The man in the middle, Wilson's presence at the center midfield position was immense…Had the ability to score when needed, but was most effective as the key component to the Harbormen's trademark short passing game…Played in the middle, but rarely stayed there as his ability to read the field and opposing team's defenses often put him on the attack…He was great at knowing when to pass the ball and saw solid success in tallying nine assists this season…Wilson also scored four goals…Would also routinely drop back defensively when games were close…To put it simply, Wilson was just everywhere…His play in the middle sparked Hingham's potent offense, helping the Harbormen (21-1-1) capture the Patriot League title and Div. 2 South Sectional crown…He is a two-year starter on the Hingham team. Hingham coach Ken Carlin: "He held the midfield together and gave a lot of people a lot of opportunities. He really tried to do whatever he could to keep the ball in play and that's one of the main reasons why we needed him."

Nick Jones -
Senior (Capt.)
Sweeper - Hingham

Sure Hingham had plenty of firepower, but you know what they say about winning championships…The leader on the defensive side of the Harbormen's field, Jones was the anchor of a backfield that allowed just 15 goals in the regular season and recorded eight shutouts…A great reader of the field, Jones' ability to clear the ball with purpose often got the Harbormen's potent attack going from the back…He himself contributed six points on four goals, two assists…A Patriot League All-star, Jones was called upon to mark some of the team's most talented strikers and he did so seemingly with ease…Shut down fellow All-Scholastic Scott Cluff in a key 1-0 win over Silver Lake, which ultimately sealed the league title…In the Div. 2 South tourney, Jones and the rest of the HHS defense allowed just three goals in four games and shut out Medway 1-0 to win the Sectional title…Jones was being heavily recruited by colleges and plans to play next fall. Hingham coach Ken Carlin: "He had the great ability to settle the team down. He was the best at being able to get everyone back on track. He has a strong kick and was a great captain."

David Ellis - Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Braintree

One of the best players in the Bay State Conference, as evidenced by his selection to the league's first team All-Star squad…A second team All-Star in his junior season as an outside midfielder, Ellis switched to the center-mid spot this year and handled it quite well…Controlled games on offense and defense from his position…Possesses excellent vision of the field, passing skills, and overall sense of the game…Finished the season with 14 points, including a team-best 12 assists…Also a solid defensive player, particularly with his man-to-man marking ability…Always a threat with his trademark flip throw-in, consistently launching balls into the penalty area in the attacking third… A three-year starter for the Wamps, and four-year varsity player…Played club soccer for Galway Rovers…Younger brother, Brian, stars for the BHS boys basketball team…Has two more younger brothers, John and Patrick, both multi-sport athletes…Also the top gymnast on a Braintree High boys team that is gunning for its fourth straight state championship this winter…Started gymnastics when he was two years old, and plans to continue in college…Braintree coach Bill McEachern: "He had a great year for us. He was our team leader and, if you ask the other coaches, one of the most respected guys in the league."

Ryan Shea - Junior Forward - Hanover

A two-time Patriot League All-star and All-Scholastic, Shea was the leading scorer in the Fisher Division for the second straight season, despite missing six games with an injury…Shea netted 40 points on 18 goals, 22 assists to lead the Indians to a share of the division title at 6-0-2…At 13-3-2 overall, the Hanover boys earned the No. 5 seed in the Div. 3 South tourney and knocked off Ashland and Fairhaven before squaring off with Cohasset in the semis…There, Shea assisted the game-winning goal scored by his twin brother Matt in Hanover's 1-0 win…The squad downed Seekonk in the South final behind a goal and two assists from Shea in the Indians' 3-0 victory…Just a junior, Shea will enter his senior season with 90 career points on 41 goals, 49 assists…Plays year round with the Cape Cod Crusaders and is a member of the two-time New England Champion Super Y Under-17 team. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "When you talk about Hanover soccer, you have to talk about Matt and Ryan Shea. They are two players to be reckoned with."

Matt Shea - Junior
Midfielder - Hanover

Most coaches in the South Shore area would be happy to have just one Shea, but Hanover is fortunate to have both…Like his twin brother Ryan, Shea is a major scoring threat in the midfield and helped pace the Indians to a share of the Patriot League Fisher Div. title at 6-0-2…Shea tallied 34 points on 18 goals, 16 assists this season, finishing second in the scoring ranks to only Ryan…To date, Shea has 33 goals, 45 assists for his career with one season still to play…A Patriot League All-star for the second-straight season, Shea tallied the game-winning goal on a corner kick offering from his brother in a key 1-0 Div. 3 South semifinal win over Cohasset…Shea also had an assist in the 3-0 victory over Seekonk in the finals, earning Hanover the title…The junior maintains a 4.0 GPA at HHS and plays year round on the Cape Cod Crusaders team…He and his brother were also members of the two-time New England Champion Under-17 Super Y team. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "When you talk about Hanover soccer, you have to talk about Matt and Ryan Shea. They are two players to be reckoned with."

Mike Dion - Senior
Goalie - Hanover

This talented senior had the type of season in the net that some players will never experience…Dion was a virtual brick wall this season, allowing just 21 goals in 18 regular season games for a 1.16 goals against average…Recorded eight shutouts this season, including one against Duxbury (1-0) and Rockland (0-0), which allowed the Indians to snag a share of the Patriot League Fisher Div. title with the Bulldogs (both 6-0-2)…The PL All-star shined the brightest when it mattered most, not allowing a single goal in Hanover's road to a Div. 3 South title…Dion shut out Ashland (2-0), Fairhaven (2-0), Cohasset (1-0), and Seekonk (3-0) to help capture the crown…Not a flashy keeper, Dion simply plays smart and is a great play reader…A two-year starter in the net, Dion has also been active in hockey and lacrosse at HHS…He plans to enlist in the Marine Corps. ROTC program after graduation. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "He made a lot of key saves in the (tournament) and in the times our offense was slow, he kept us in the game."

Willie Forman -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Marshfield

One of the most exciting players to watch throughout his career, Forman graduates as the Old Colony League's Most Valuable Player…The OCL, Eastern Mass., and two-time All-State All-star, Forman was the every man in the middle for the co-champion Rams…Few

All-Scholastic boys soccer team

opposing defenses could harness his blistering speed and unbelievable foot skills, as Forman made even some of the best teams vulnerable…Case in point, his two-goal, one-assist effort in a tough 5-4 loss to Div. 2 South champs, Hingham…Forman tallied eight goals, nine assists this season after racking up 11 goals, 11 assists as a junior…He was an essential part of a more balanced Marshfield squad that went 9-6-3 overall and won a share of the OCL title (4-1-1) despite being riddled with injuries throughout the season…A year-round player with the Cape Cod Crusaders, Forman would like to continue his soccer career at either Keene State or Southern New Hampshire next fall.

Mike Fraser - Junior Forward - Marshfield

Forman leaves the future of the Rams offense in good hands with Fraser returning…Was named an Old Colony League, Eastern Mass., and All-State All-star for his play on the right wing this season…Was among the leading scorers on the Marshfield squad, tallying 17 points on 10 goals, eight assists…He was just one of a trio of finishers on the Rams' talent-loaded young squad…A strong presence who was most dangerous in front of the net, Fraser helped guide the Rams to another OCL title (4-1-1), an honor they shared with Bridgewater-Raynham. Marshfield went 9-6-3 overall, qualifying for play in the Div. 1 South Sectional in a season in which they perservered through heartbreaking injuries…Played one of his better games against Div. 2 South semifinalist Silver Lake, scoring a goal and an assist in a 4-1 victory…Also a basketball and baseball player at MHS, Fraser will return to the field next fall.

Colin Henry - Sophomore
Midfield - Norwell

Referred to by his coaches at the beginning of the season as one of the team's most improved players, and he lived up to it…Led the Clippers in scoring (13 goals, nine assists for 22 points)…A South Shore League All-Star this season…Attributes his improvement to playing club soccer for the South Shore United Blazers…though undersized, Henry is one of the speediest and shiftiest players in these parts…also an outstanding passer who sees the whole field…the non-stop motor and desire, though, are what truly set him apart…brother of former Mariner All-Scholastic soccer player and trackster Ryan Henry (Class of '03), now running track at Boston College…Father Matt Henry has been the Clippers assistant coach the last four years… Scored a hat trick (with two assists) in 8-0 win at Hull on Sept. 30…Says the late season game against Abington, where he scored the only goal of the match with under a minute left, was his top highlight from the season…One of the top performers for the Norwell track program, both winter and spring…Will likely be the primary focus of opposing defenses next season…Hopes to play soccer in college…Norwell coach Jack Browne: "He just got better and better this year, and that's just going to continue. He's going to be something to watch. He's was one of the fastest kids in the league, but he's also one of the toughest and most relentless players around."

Scott Kitchen -
Senior (Capt.) -
Defender - Norwell

This South Shore League and Eastern Mass. All-Star was one of the most versatile players around…Although midfield is his natural position, Kitchen played just about everywhere for the Clippers this season; was moved up front when Norwell needed scoring, and back to defense when the back line needed help…Wound up playing stopper down the stretch and into the postseason, to better capitalize on his all-around skills…Finished the season with eight goals and five assists…Scored the team's only goal in 2-1 loss to Division 1 power Brockton early in the season, one of the Clippers' best matches of the year…Scored both his team's goals in 3-2 loss to Carver on Oct. 6…Says those two games were his best of the year…Plays with a lot of energy, usually running non-stop for the full 80 minutes…Is one of three captains on the boys tennis team this spring, where he will return as likely one of the best third singles players in the area…Enjoys skiing and joined the robotics team at NHS this year…Plans on playing soccer at a Division 3 school, and will likely study international business…Norwell coach Jack Browne: "Kitch made a huge impact no matter where we played him. He was a warrior. The problem was if we moved him up front, we'd struggle so much in the back. We tried to walk a fine line with him, but we couldn't ask him to be two places at once."

Andrew Roy
Goalkeeper - Pembroke

The Pembroke boys' soccer team qualified for the state tournament this season and Roy was a big reason why in goal. The senior captain finished the year with seven shutouts in leading his team, in its second year in existence, to a 7-10-3 record, but more importantly a .500 record against Division 3 opponents, allowing the Titans to qualify for the postseason. Roy was the only senior on a very young squad and his leadership and his ability earned him Patriot League all-star status, as well as being named team MVP. Last season he won the coach's award for his stellar efforts. For his career he finished with a very impressive 14 shutouts. He is an honor roll student and also captains the Pembroke high hockey team during the winter. Said head coach Foster Cass during the season, "He's very steady and faces a lot of shots. He keeps us in a lot of games."

Matt Dupont -
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Rockland

The Bulldogs had one of the most exciting seasons in recent years and Dupont was a major reason why…An unselfish player on the front line, Dupont was a playmaker, always knowing when to score or when to pass…Had some of his better games when they mattered most, including a big 1-0 victory over Patriot League rival Silver Lake, a Div. 2 South semifinalist…Dupont's play up front helped guide the Bulldogs to a share of the PL Fisher Div. title, tying rival Hanover for the honor with identical 6-0-2 records…Rockland went 13-3-2 overall, qualifying for tourney play in the Div. 2 South…The PL All-star and Eastern Mass. All-star and his crew of only two substitutions ended up finishing the year as a Globe ranked top 20 team…Dupont also wrestles and runs track at RHS…He is also ranked seventh in his class of 191.

Garrett Smith -
Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Rockland

This Patriot League All-star was the anchor of a team that faced the difficult scenario of having only a pair of substitutions…Smith was stellar in net this season, allowing just 17 goals and shut out 11 opponents in 18 games this past fall for a 0.94 goals against average…Played some of his best soccer against a pair of league powerhouses, shutting out a highly-potent Hanover team in a scoreless tie and quieting Silver Lake star Scott Cluff in a 1-0 win…Also denied several chances in a 1-1 tie with the Indians, resulting in Rockland's 6-0-2 Fisher Div. record (13-3-2 overall) that tied Hanover for the league title…Not the type of goalie who sits back and watches plays unfold, Smith typically disrupted them before they got started…A year-round player with the Cape Cod Crusaders, and is currently undecided in terms of college plans.

Dave Nelson -
Senior (Capt.)
Sweeper - Scituate

Spent most of his time at sweeper, but played just about everywhere on the field at one point or another for the Sailors…If Scituate needed scoring, Nelson wasn't afraid to push forward and help in the attack…A Patriot League first team All-Star…Scituate coaches feel he was an Eastern Mass. All-Star caliber player, as well…Has a great sense for the game…Can stop an opposing attack with a solid tackle and find a teammate with a cutting pass, both with equal skill…Provided strong leadership to a young Sailors team…Younger brother Chris, a freshman, appears to be one of the program's rising stars…Dave is also one of the top sprinters on the indoor track team…Scituate coach Jim Willis: "Dave does it all. Over his years here, he played every position from sweeper to forward, and he would have loved to play goalie if he could. I thought he was easily one of the top five players in the league."

Scott Cluff
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Silver Lake

Cluff finished the season as the leading scorer for the Lakers, who finished second in the Patriot League, and advanced to the sectional semifinals before falling to Hingham. Cluff was a major force at the offensive end this season as he recorded 14 goals and added 11 assists, including a four goal effort in a win over East Bridgewater. For his efforts he was named a Patriot League, and an EMass all-star this season. He scored the only goal in the Lakers' semifinal loss to Hingham, and added a goal and assist in the opening round victory over Apponequet. He is a dedicated soccer player, playing club soccer for the Cape Cod Crusaders. He also runs track for the Lakers. He is an honor roll student, and hopes to continue his soccer career next year playing in college.

Dom DeChiara
Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Silver Lake

The Lakers reeled off a stellar season in head coach Jeff Doyle's final year at the helm and DeChiara was a main reason why. He was voted a Patriot League all-star this year and was named Team MVP while leading the Lakers to a second place finish in the league and a semifinal berth in the Division 2 south semifinals. He was also named to the All-State team this year for his efforts. DeChiara was the Lakers' leading scorer in the state tournament setting up teammates from his center midfield spot to the tune of a goal and five assists in the three games. His best effort came in the quarterfinals against Wellesley where he scored a goal and added two assists in the 4-2 win over the Marauders. He finished the season with five goals and 12 assists for the Lakers. In the winter DeChiara also laces up his skates for the hockey team, and is an honor roll student.

Marty Galvin
Senior- (Capt.)
Forward - Weymouth

The top scorer on the Division 1 south sectional finalist, Galvin had a season to remember in his final campaign, particularly in the march through the tournament. In the Division 1 south sectionals the senior striker potted five goals in the tournament including the tying goal in the final against Attleboro that forced overtime, he also assisted on the game winner in the semifinals over Sandwich. His season totals of 21 goals and seven assists would have been higher were it not for the surgically repaired knee he was rehabbing from in the first half of the season. Galvin was a fearsome scorer in the second half of the year and had the ability to break one at any time. He finished his career with a whopping total of 57 goals. He was a Bay State league all-star and an EMass all-star this year. He is a club soccer player, and a National Honor Society member. He will continue his soccer career next fall at the University of Vermont.

Jarred Goldstein
Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Weymouth

Goldstein was among the leading scorers in the Bay State league for much of the season until an injured ankle slowed him down in the final games of the regular season. Goldstein teamed well as a playmaker with fellow all-scholastic Marty Galvin and the two wreaked havoc on opposing defenses for much of the season. He finished the season with 12 goals and 13 assists this season. He returned in the sectional semifinals to scorer the game winning goal despite still being hobbled by the badly sprained ankle. Also scored a big goal in a 1-1 tie with Bay State League champion Framingham. He was a solid two-way player who was a solid defender in the midfield as well. Like his teammate he was a Bay State League all-star and an EMass all-star. He is an honor roll student and hopes to continue his soccer career at the next level at a four-year college.

John Griffin
Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Weymouth

Griffin was one of the unsung heroes of the Wildcats all season long, but his moment in the spotlight came during the biggest moment of the season. With the game tied in the final minutes of double overtime in the sectional semifinal, Griffin dribbled hard down the sideline looking for someone to center the ball to. With nobody wide open he threw the ball towards the net hoping for something good to happen, and what resulted was beyond his wildest dreams, the ball deflected off a defender and rolled right into the goal for the game winner and a trip to the state semifinals. It was a sweet reward for someone who played "an awesome tournament," said coach Steve Shoff. "He upped his game a lot the last five games." Griffin was a very consistent midfielder all season long, earning Bay State league all-star recognition in the process. He also won the Wildcats award for his enthusiasm at the end of the year banquet.

Dara Nunan
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Weymouth

Nunan was another unsung hero for the Wildcats on their march to the sectional title. He finished the season as the third leading scorer for Weymouth, and was a dangerous weapon when teams were able to shut down Galvin and Goldstein. He finished the season with almost 20 points, and was a Bay State League all-star for his efforts. He was a tough shadow for opponents, and his ability to get to the net opened things up in the tournament for other scorers to do some damage. His leadership was also evident throughout his career, and was rewarded by being named a captain this year along with the other three all-scholastics, the first time in head coach Steve Shoff"s career that he named quad-captains.

saying "we have worked on our press since the beginning of the season. It finally came together and it works!"

Offensively speaking, the Skippers looked like a completely different team from weeks past. They now run all the way through their plays, often winding down 20 seconds until they find the best opportunity to score. This improved shot selection proved very important, especially in the second half of the game.

Despite all the Cohasset improvements, Abington displayed why they have annually been one of the South Shore League's top teams. Capitalizing on Skipper mistakes, the Green Wave built up a seven point lead late in the game. The Skippers proceeded to crawl back to within one point of Abington. Then some freshman magic surfaced onto the floor.

Sam Lehr snagged an offensive rebound off her own foul shot. She successfully went for the basket to give Cohasset the go-ahead point. On the next Abington possession, Lehr stole the ball, killing any chance of an Abington score. She broke away for the Cohasset basket. With green jerseys appearing in the corner of her eye, she laid the ball in for two points to secure the 36-33 Skipper victory.

At the same time the Skippers found an outstanding rhythm to their game, they lost senior tri-captain Katie James to a badly sprained ankle. She will remain on the sidelines for at least two weeks.

"Katie's shoes will be tough to fill," said Levangie. "We will see who is up to playing the position and just do our best from there."

So what drives the Skippers' success? Maybe they just started to click. Or maybe the cause lies in team members showing up early to practice so they can get to know each other better. Whatever the cause, the Skippers now do things very differently and it works.

As we all know, there remains a fine line between confidence and arrogance. So, as long as the Skippers stay on the right side of this line, there's no telling what they can accomplish in the remainder of the season.

COHASSET TRAVEL BASKETBALL

Boys travel hoop battles Bridgewater

The Cohasset Boys Travel basketball teams started 2006 on down note, as all three squads were defeated by Bridgewater.

The 6th graders began the action at CMHS. Winning the tip off, things looked good; however, what ensued was a defensive battle. There were goose eggs on the board until Bridgewater pressed Cohasset and stole the ball, scoring the first basket at the 11 minute mark. BW continued to score three more baskets before the boys in blue got on the board.

Charlie Neaves sunk the second of two foul shots and it was 4-2 BW. Jamie Faber converted a steal to a bucket. Pat MacCormack chipped in two points, but it was a big three-pointer by Christian Allard to bring Cohasset to within three points with one minute left in the half.

The second half started with a regrouped BW squad that employed solid passing and precise shooting that started an insurmountable run. Cohasset - Robbie Mahoney broke the scoring drought and opened Cohasset's first basket of the second half with a nice feed from Allard. Jay Salerno was strong under the boards for Cohasset. Patrick Kearney, Morgan McCarthy and Chris Lunde delivered solid efforts for the sixers, helping bring their team to within three points of victory, but time ran out.

In a battle of the unbeatens, the 7th grade squads took to the floor next. Much like the sixers, it was a defensive battle, with both teams looking rusty offensively after the long holiday break. Kelby Pontes put the boys in blue on the board first with a bucket and was fouled in the process. KJ failed to convert his free throw attempts.

It was still 2-0 Cohasset at the 6:45 mark after KJ had a monster blocked shot. Teammate Gabe Seksay also had a tremendous blocked shot, but a timely three-pointer by BW put the opponents on top. Mike Monaco contributed a much needed bucket. But BW was up by three at the half.

The second half had Ben Campbell and Robert Jones working the offense, while Jack Carrier, Pontes, Seksay and Eric Wasel protected the paint and provided good second and third chance shots. However, the shots didn't fall for the good guys. Derek Youngman, Alex Harper and Sam Richardson ignited a few offensive spurts but the good guys fell short at the buzzer, registering their first loss of the season.

The afternoon finished with the 8th graders, looking for their first win. BW came out fired up and jumped to an 8-0 lead, taking advantage of Cohasset turnovers. Robby McCunney put the boys in blue on the board converting a defensive steal to a bucket.

Then the offense got started. Johnny Maher fed Jeff Charles for two, McCunney fed Kevin O'Connell for two. But this offensive action couldn't catch up to the BW led. The height advantage of BW kept them in control of the boards despite strong efforts by Dana Valentine and Dan Sullivan. BW was leading 20-8.

Brendan Doonan and John Kearney got their teammates fired up with scrappy, aggressive defense. Offensively, the team composed themselves. Patience and some clutch shooting brought the team to within seven of BW. But BW turned on the jets and led by 11 with six minutes left. Will Wise and McCunney hassled the BW guards, but they were able to get the ball inside, where Cohasset was outmatched in height, extending their lead, eventually winning the contest.

Seventh grade girls turn in two strong performances

The seventh grade basketball team turned in its best overall performance this past weekend in their two-plus years of playing together with a 17-13 win at Norwell on Saturday and a 20-19 loss to Hull in the final seconds on Sunday. The Seven-Ups are now 3-3 on the season.

Norwell had been a nemesis for the Cohasset Sevens since Cohasset joined the South Shore Basketball League. Norwell defeated Cohasset twice in the regular season last year and then eliminated the Cohasset girls in the playoffs. Norwell also defeated Cohasset in the Abington pre-season tournament in November.

However, on Saturday the Cohasset Sevens turned the tables. After getting off to a slow start, the Cohasset girls moved out to an 8-7 lead by the intermission on four points by Carli Haggerty and a hoop each by Lindsay Davis and Kate French.

In addition, the Sevens were playing a near-flawless game on defense. Their aggressive 2-3 zone gave Norwell few good looks at the basket. The Cohasset backcourt of Emma Quigley, Rachel Fredey, and Caroline Fein consistently got back on defense to prevent Norwell from getting any fast break or transition baskets and the frontcourt of Haggerty, French, Davis, Emma Musto, Carly Martin, and Logan Pratt controlled the defensive boards.

The Seven-Ups continued to play near-flawless basketball at the start of the second half, opening up a 14-7 margin by the midpoint on hoops by French, Davis, and Fredey. The Cohasset girls consistently beat the Norwell press and continued to play rock-solid defense. Their lead would have been even bigger had several of their shots by Pratt, Quigley, and Fredey not been of the in-and-out variety that refused to go down the cylinder.

Norwell slowly crept back, pulling within 14-13 with a minute to play. However, Fredey sank the front end of a 1-on-1 and Haggerty put back an offensive rebound to seal the deal for the 17-13 win.

Sunday's game with Hull once again featured a strong Cohasset defensive effort against a Hull team which had scored 34 points against the Blue and White in their first encounter earlier this season. Neither team was able to open up more than a three point lead in a true back-and-forth, up-and-down basketball game.

However, after trailing most of the way, the Cohasset girls finally pulled ahead, 17-15, with three minutes to play thanks to some clutch free throw shooting by French, who sank a pair from the charity stripe. A Hull free throw was answered by a free throw by Fredey to maintain the two-point edge. After Hull tied the score on two more from the free throw line, Carli Haggerty sank a free throw to leave matters at 19-18 in favor of Cohasset with 25 seconds to play.

However, a victory was not to be in the cards for the Blue and White, as a Hull girl drew a foul on a tough call inside and then sank both FTs for a 20-19 Hull lead with 15 seconds showing on the clock. That would prove to be the game, as Cohasset threw the ball away on their final possession.

Davis, playing at guard for the first time in the absence of a regular Cohasset backcourt player, led the Blue and White with eight points on four buckets from the 15-18 foot range. Haggerty and French had four points, Fredey two, and Musto one.

Fifth graders play well in weekend tilts

The 5th grade girls faced two more strong opponents last weekend. On Saturday morning, they squared off against Norwell. Norwell came out shooting and quickly went up, 8-2.

Cohasset got back in the game on the outside shooting of Gabrielle Rioux, who hit two long range jump shots. Charlotte Barczewski and Kate Sookiasian each scored two points to round out the scoring. The Fives had more scoring opportunities with Christine Chase and Sarah Fredey driving to the basket and getting fouled, but they were unable to capitalize on the free throws.

The Blue and White played stellar defense in the second half, limiting Norwell to just two baskets. Emma Smith and Kristin Alexander anchored the middle and Abbey Carrier chased down every pass at the top of the key. Isabella Flibotte cleaned up the rebounds down low. However, the Fives were unable to finish their plays at the offensive end, and the final score was in favor of Norwell, 18-8.

On Sunday afternoon, Cohasset played a tough Hull team. Again, the defense let down early and Cohasset fell behind, 10-2. However, Christine Chase drove to the basket, was fouled, and made two free throws and Smith added two points to keep the Fives within striking distance.

Down 16-8 at the half, the Blue and White girls came to life. The defense tightened and created offensive opportunities. Six more points from Chase and buckets by Alexander, Isabella Flibotte, and Gabrielle Rioux provided the offensive firepower. The guard play of Fredey and Carrier kept the Hull team on the defensive. Barczewski and Sookiasian helped out with the rebounding and passing on the motion offense. The total team effort allowed Cohasset to storm back to take a 20-18 lead with two minutes to go.

After Hull scored to make it 20-20, Cohasset was unable to respond on its next possession. Hull got the ball back and drew a tough foul call under the basket. The Hull girl made one free throw to put Hull up 21-20 with 10 seconds left in the game. Cohasset tried a long pass for the win, but was unable to score.

"It was a tough loss," said fifth grade coach Steve Fredey afterwards, "but it was a huge step for the girls in believing in themselves and becoming a team."

have a perfect match. Everyone is beatable."

At 112, Ryan McClellan surprised everyone and finished second, giving him two strong finishes in a row. McClellan provided Cohasset with valuable points before losing in the finals to Jon Tan (North Quincy) by pin.

Probably the most consistent and most surprising wrestler for Cohasset so far has been Nick Cambi. Wrestling in the 189 weigh class, Cambi continued his impressive performances by finishing second. Cambi lost a tough match to Ryan Connors (Xaverian) in the finals 13-7.

Nonetheless, it was a disappointing day for both Dave McKenna and Jake Watts. McKenna finished sixth in the 152 weight class. Going into the tournament, McKenna was optimistic about his chances, as the field wasn't as tough as the Marshfield Tournament, where he also finished sixth.

McKenna, however, couldn't get it going from the get go and, according to him, "had a terrible day." Still, McKenna knows what it takes to be a winner, as he was Division 3 state champ last year, so don't count him out for another run at the title.

In regards to Watts, he failed to make a weight of 103; thus, eliminating him from wrestling in a tournament where he very possibly could have won.

Another notable wrestler that had a pretty good tournament was George Miller (215), as he finished sixth.

As a team, Cohasset needs to have an overall record above .500 to be included in the sectionals.

"Our goal right now is to be above .500 and beating BC High was big, but then we have a showing like Marshfield where everyone didn't do as good as we thought," said McKenna, one of the team's senior captains. "But, I look at February as a key month where everyone will be all tuned up and ready to make some noise in Division 3."

When asked whom he thought was the team's biggest surprise so far, McKenna said, "Definitely Cambi, because everyone knows he has the strength and moves. He just needed some experience, and by placing as well as he has so far, I think that's a big boost in his confidence level.

"Also, Steven Gratta (from Hull) is a backup at the 103/112 slot who we know we can put in there in an emergency and we won't lose a beat."

Next for Cohasset is its own tournament this upcoming weekend. Then that's all for tournaments, as Cohasset has several key dual meets against Rockland, Duxbury, and Carver. Let's hope that seniors like Dorian, McKenna, Watts and Miller can provide Cohasset with the leadership it needs to successfully get above .500 and maintain its reputation as one of the best wrestling programs in Eastern Mass.

of T.J. Kennedy, Alex Goetz and Chris Davis played a great game. They were our most consistent line; they play our system every shift."

Another key for Cohasset was a switch between senior tri-captain Brandon Smith and sophomore Patrick Doonan, with Smith moving up to a forward position and Doonan moving back to the blue line. Smith is one of the team's better puck-carriers, and he scored Cohasset's first goal against Hull four minutes into the game, as Lanzillotti controlled a faceoff in the circle back to Smith, whose shot went 5-hole into the net.

Holway scored Cohasset's second goal with 3:12 left in the second period, assisted by Doonan. Freshman goaltender Jonny Wade played one of his best games of the year, making nine saves, including a couple big saves in the third period when it was still a one-goal game.

This was the second straight positive result for Cohasset, who earned a 4-4 tie with Mashpee at the Falmouth Ice Arena last Sunday night. The Skippers were down 3-0 after the first period, but goals from Bouchard, Straughn and Holway tied it up in the second.

Mashpee regained the lead, but Straughn tied it once again in the closing minutes.

"After that first period, I thought to myself, 'We might not be able to come back from this,'" Virga said. "But in that second and third period, the kids just left everything on the ice."

Cohasset, now 2-4-2 on the season, face a couple big tests when they travel to Rockland Ice Rink this Saturday to take on Abington-East Bridgewater (5:20 p.m. start), and play Norwell on Wednesday night (7:40) at Pilgrim. The Clippers assumed first place in the South Shore League standings this past Wednesday with a chippy, hotly contested 4-3 victory over Harwich-Provincetown.

'Sinbad' book signing at Hull museum

U.S. Coast Guard Chief George F. Foley Jr. will be at the Hull Lifesaving Museum Thursday, Feb. 2, at 7 p.m. for a presentation and signing of his book, "Sinbad of the Coast Guard." The book is illustrated by George Gray, of the USCG Reserve, with an introduction by Mike Walling, author of "Bloodstained Sea: The U.S. Coast Guard in the Battle of the Atlantic 1941-1944." Admission is $3 for Hull Lifesaving Museum members, $5 non-members.

Foley tells the adventurous true story of Sinbad whose exploits aboard the U.S. Coast Guard cutter, Campbell, during World War II, became legend. His black and tan figure was known in 100 ports, from Greenland- where he nearly caused an international incident – to Africa, where he was the guest at a Sultan's Palace – and as far away as Japan. Although famous to thousands of people in many nations, Sinbad was happiest at sea, treading the decks of the sleek Campbell, where he was treated as just another member of the crew. Battles and hurricanes never dulled his love of standing on the heaving deck with spray breaking over his sturdy body. To Coast Guardsmen and sailors all over the world, he was a hero and a real salty dog.

Appropriately, Sinbad's story has been told, as well as illustrated, by fellow Coast Guard members.

Along with the introduction by Walling, this new edition, the first in 60 years, adds photos of Sinbad, and information about the Campbell.

Athletic Director Ron Ford and Principal Joel Antolini pose with the Ames Award at last week's school committee meeting.

Skippers chosen for Ames sports award

Cohasset has been recognized for its outstanding achievements in sports during 2005. CHS Athletic Director Ron Ford said just before Christmas, he was informed by the Boston Globe that Cohasset will be one of two schools to receive this year's Boston Globe's Ames Award. The award is named after Larry Ames, the assistant sports editor for high school sports at the Globe from 1979 to 1994. The Ames Award is given to schools with enrollment figures of 699 students or less in grades nine through 12.

This is the first time in the award's history, which was first given out in 1973, that Cohasset has been the recipient. "This is a credit to our kids and our coaches who do a tremendous job," said Ford.

In 2005, Cohasset had a 57.29 winning percentage. The football team went 10-0 and wrestling was 14-2. Girls gymnastics went 11-2 and tennis finished 17-3.

Annual cabaret at Atlantica Jan. 19

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTOPHER PESCATORE

Now that the New Year is upon us, seniors can't help but think about this year as the year that we graduate and begin the next chapter of our lives. Seniors are beginning to wrap up the application/ job search process and send their apps and résumés out by their selected companies/college's deadlines, which for the most part are some time this month. The semester is winding down and will culminate at the end of January with students visiting the guidance office to adjust their schedules for the latter half of the year.

The seniors are being offered six new English elective courses for the second half of the year that will be taught by Mrs. Berman and Mr. Palmieri. These course selections being offered are: Public Speaking, Shakespeare, Poetry, Literature of Diversity, Creative Writing, and Journalism. The news is not of abundance this week, but what I do have is rather important to the entire scheme of things here at the School, so here it is.

• Congressman William Delahunt spoke to the juniors and seniors last Tuesday about the current state of affairs of the United States and asked the students opinions on a number of political questions. Thanks to Sydney Fallon for arranging his visit as part of her Community Service Project.

• The High School Band and Chorus will perform in their annual Cabaret on Jan. 19th at Atlantica. Be sure to attend this always entertaining event, it begins at 7 p.m. and the admission price is $10. Those students who wish to participate should contact Mr. Marks or Ms. Hoskin.

Be sure to attend this always entertaining event, it begins at 7 p.m. and the admission price is $10.

• The Art website is constantly being updated and is promised to be new and improved, so don't hesitate to visit it at www.cohassetartsboosters.com. One of the new features on this page is a "message board" function that will allow students, staff, and community members to view and post news about arts at the Middle-High School.

• The Cohasset Varsity Ski Team participated in their first race on Monday, the 9th at the picturesque Blue Hills Ski Area. The team looks quite promising this year with over half a dozen seniors leading the way.

• The Cohaset-Scituate Swim Team has been extremely busy lately and has participated in a few meets since the vacation. They beat Hingham last week, and will have participated in a meet Tuesday, Versus Middleboro.

• The Middle School has been practicing "Bus evacuation drills" during their "X" block this week.

• The Boys varsity Basketball Team will have competed in three home games this past week with hopes of improving their record to 500.

• The National Honor Society will have met yesterday, the 12th during lunch to discuss their progress with tutoring and future plans for improvement in the organization. Hopefully, a committee will be formed sooner rather than later, and juniors will have a chance to join the society.

• The Social Awareness Organization will have met on Tuesday, the 10th to discuss possible future events where they can make their presence felt and give back to the community.

• There will have been a professional half day on Wednesday, the 11th at which time the teachers will have a luncheon, the proceeds of which will go to the Doonan Family Fire Relief Fund.

• The Diversity Committee will have met today at 8:30 a.m. in the High School Library.

• The Scituate High School academic team will return at the end of January to compete against Mrs. Berman's AP English class in a clash of the titans in another knowledge bowl. The first one ended in a tie, much to the chagrin of a few Cohasset students who feel that they were robbed by the proctor.

• A hardy Cohasset High School welcome to the new Main Office secretary, Mrs. Lewis.

• The Middle School Student Council raised $1,000 in their Christmas Tree Drive over the Holidays.

• Ms. Lisa Mullen's seventh-grade Red Team science classes had a 3D cell contest on Tuesday, the 10th. First place went to Emma Quigley and Carly Martin, second place to Meaghan Costello, and third place to Garrett Canney and Mark Dick.

Good luck to all the sports teams that are competing this week, fan support is crucial to our athletic success so everyone not participating in a sport should do their best to attend the upcoming home games/meets. It's crunch time now for the students as they do their best to improve their academic situation as the term comes to an end; so parents remember to be easy on your children in these upcoming weeks.

Deer Hill students act as engineers

Deer Hill School's enrichment program, EMC^3, is off to a successful start. One of the programs offered during the first session is an engineering class, Building Toothpick Bridges. Students have already begun to work in groups of three, to build a toothpick bridge based on the program and book by Jeanne Pollard. The students are designing their own structural plans based on their choice of using a beam, arch or suspension prototype. They will build the bridges according to specifications, such as number of toothpicks used, amount of glue, and equal amounts of work time.

The engineering project allows students to practice effective communication skills, work cooperatively, and learn how function affects bridge design and how design affects the strength and structural integrity of a bridge. During their last scheduled class, students will decide whether or not to test their bridges for strength. Groundbreaking for construction of bridges is Wednesday, Jan. 18.

Deer Hill instructional technology teacher Cassandra O'Brien, and fourth grade teacher Kayne Beaudry, are guiding students throughout the project. According to O'Brien, the only question that remains is, "Will these students be ready to assist with the Sagamore Bridge project if needed?"

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

SEARCHING FOR THE RIGHT CAMP – WHERE DO I BEGIN?

By Bette S. Bussel - Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

Although it's January and it's hard for us to imagine a world without snow, ice and mittens...let's take a moment and think about swimming in the lake, chasing fireflies and toasting marshmallows. Summer camp is a wonderful memory for so many of us and now, as parents, we want to create those same memories for our kids. Where do you begin? There are solid professionals out there ready and able to help you find a great camp. We know that the camp search process can be confusing. Here's some advice about how to start. First of all, sit down with your family and try the three-step camp search process developed and recommended by the American Camp Association, New England, based on decades of experience assisting families with finding the right camp:

1. Talk about your family's expectations and requirements of camp

a. What are the attributes of that dream camp you hope to find? What do your kids expect? What do you want your kids to get out of camp? Describe it to each other and work out the differences of opinion that will inevitably exist between parents and children.

b. If you were a camper, your personal definition of camp will certainly come into play-usually folks want their kids to experience exactly what they had at camp or the total opposite.

2. Research camp options based on the goals and priorities you have set. Carefully consider the source of the information you review.

a. You can identify camp options through a variety of sources:
Camp consultants
The Internet (www.acanecamps.org and www.campparents.org are good places to start)
Newspaper and Broadcast advertisements
Camp fairs
Word of mouth, friends, co-workers, teachers, coaches and doctors

THE MOST DIVERSE COLLECTION IN OUR 42 YEARS!

• NO-SHOW LETTER OF CREDIT

These authentic Persian Semi-Antique (40 to 60 years old) Rugs were stranded in customs when a letter of credit never materialized. Needless to say, we bought them at a modest (heh-heh-heh!) price..

• DISTRIBUTOR'S BANKRUPTCY

This 'name-you-know' was forced to close his doors this year and we got a selection of beautiful Bokharas at a bargain price

• STORE CLOSINGS...

20 stores closed nationwide in this high-end home furnishings chain. We got a great selection of their inventory at a fraction of its cost.

• A RETAIL ICON MAKES A MISTAKE

A prestigious store runs a 'super" tent sale, but the customers stayed away in droves! You guessed it. Building # 19 to the rescue.

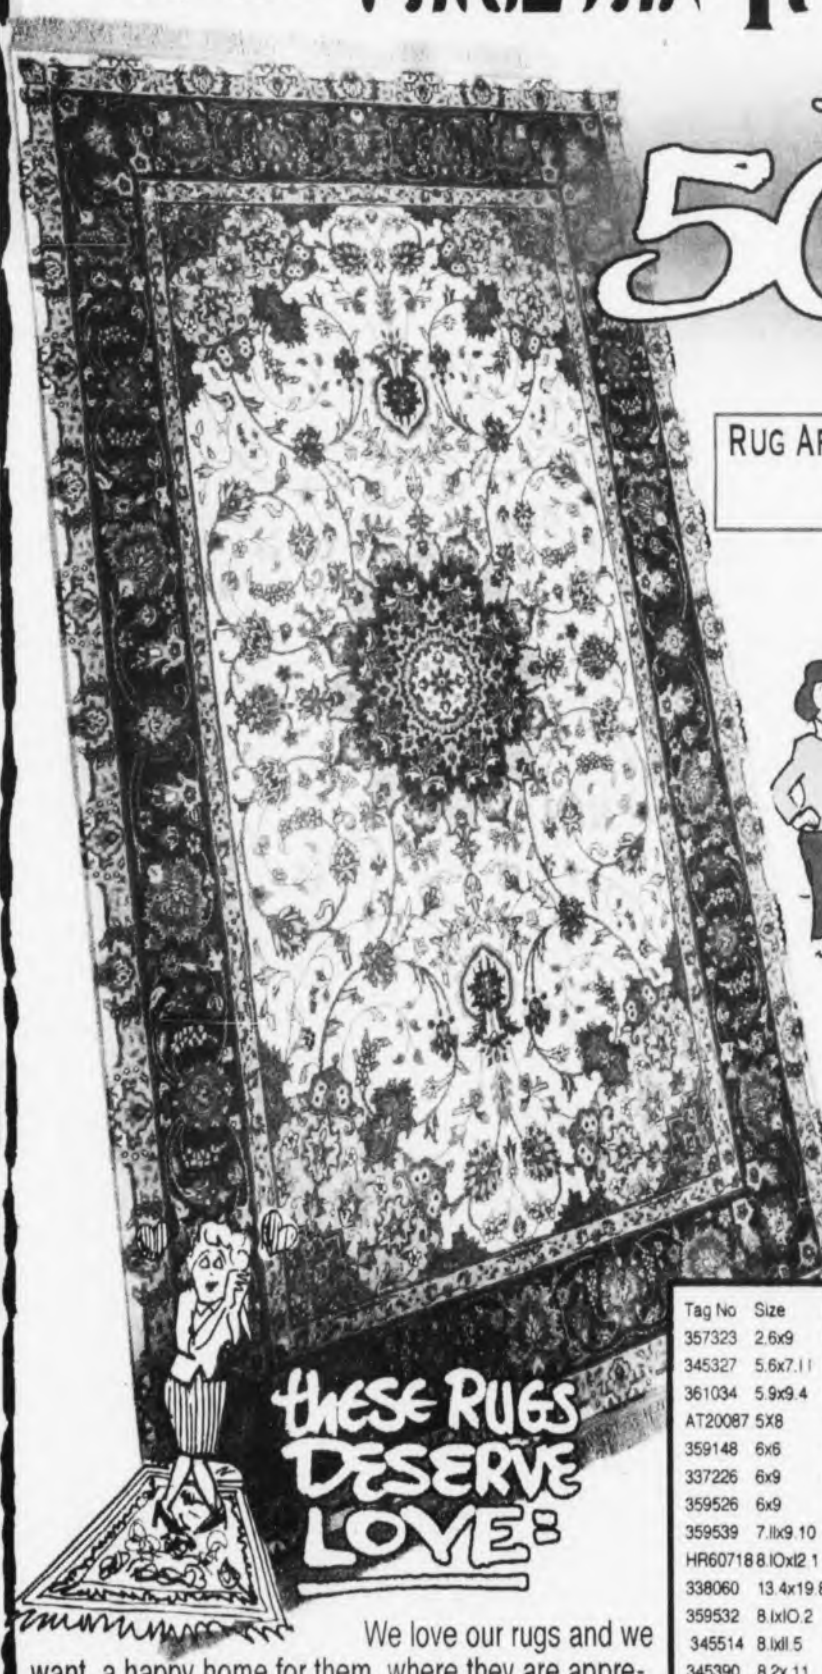
A VENDOR WITH A CASH FLOW PROBLEM

Who you gonna call when you need money to support a new fall line of rugs? Hello, Building # 19? Wanna buy some rugs, cheap?

• LAWYERS ARE EXPENSIVE

After going through a fairly lengthy (and messy) divorce, this internationally known importer had to liquidate several nice rugs to keep up with the alimony payments.

HANDMADE GENUINE ORIENTAL RUGS FROM PERSIA · PAKISTAN · INDIA · CHINA · Turkey



TO BE SOLD AT 50% to 86% OFF RUG STORE PRICES

RUG APPRECIATION 101

THE THREE TYPES OF ORIENTALS • TRIBAL • VILLAGE • PALACE WHAT'S the DIFFERENCE?

"This wonderful 2500 year old tradition started with Tribal Rugs which were geometric designs made by nomadic people. Since the nomads followed the grazing patterns of their sheep, the rugs were kept to a small size, so that the looms could be easily carried.

Once villages were established, the looms were set up permanently. The rugs became a way of bringing the outside in. The main themes of these were stylized flowers, trees, and garden pathways.

The palace rugs were an extension of the village rugs that were made for the very wealthy. Only the master weavers could conceive and execute each magnificent work of art."

Boston University to host program on becoming a private investigator

By Charlie Breitrose
CNC STAFF

Catching cheating spouses in the act, tracking down debtors and collecting evidence to assist a lawyer's case – it's all in a day's work for a private investigator.

Currently, there aren't enough licensed PIs to keep up with the demand.

To train more sleuths, Boston University is getting ready to open a private investigation program through the Center for Professional Education. Leading the effort is Tom Shamshak, a law enforcement veteran of 21 years. His experience includes working as police chief in Winthrop and Spencer.

BU has held a couple of open houses, which have attracted a good number of people, Shamshak said.

"People come with varying awareness and experience, but one thing in common with the people I have spoken to is they are interested in observation, analytical skills, doing research and have experience from other professional areas," Shamshak said.

As a way of finding out more about the people, Shamshak asks them who their PI inspiration is.

"That runs the gamut from Nancy Drew and the Hardy Boys, up to Sherlock Holmes," Shamshak said. "He sits at the top of the continuum. He's the PI's PI."

The class will not be fun and games, Shamshak said. The course runs 160 hours over six months on Saturdays. Each class covers a module, he said, and will teach a variety of techniques.

"They will learn an investigative methodology – a six-step method," Shamshak said. "We intend to teach skills that can apply to civil cases, criminal cases and missing person cases. They will learn about application of federal law and state law."

After receiving a groundwork in investigation, those in the class will learn the tools of the trade, both figuratively and literally.

"They will learn how to interview people and how to testify in court," Shamshak said. "And they will learn how to use contemporary equipment."

Investigators are needed for a variety of work, Shamshak said, both in the private and public sector. Some work for the Public Defender's Office, others for the insurance industry. Many work to track down information for lawyers, Shamshak said; a rich source of employment for PIs.

"There are 49,000 lawyers in Massachusetts. They need litigation support," Shamshak said.

Students will even get a lesson in the economics of running their own investigative business, Shamshak said.

The need for PIs is expected to grow quickly, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. The number of private investigating jobs is expected to increase between 21 percent and 35 percent nationally by 2012, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

BU wants to catch the wave early, said Ruth Ann Murry, director of the Center for Professional Education.

"The purpose of our center is make sure we are creating education programs for the next big area," Murry said. "We always want to set the curriculum pace for people out there. We see what others are offering and look at labor data.

"We see an above average growth for private investigation," she said.

Looking around the area, Murry said she found few places offer courses in investigation. The instructors had to create the course themselves.

"The unique problem we had was creating a curriculum for a real, top-notch program," Murry said. "We hired a number of people with law enforcement experience – retired police officers and chiefs of police – and who have extensive education experience."

The program kicks off Jan. 21, Shamshak said. More information about the course is available on the Internet at www.bu.edu/investigate.

Higher education is within your reach

By Ezat Parnia, Ph.D.
CAMBRIDGE COLLEGE

Ready to earn more? Enrich your life? Form new professional networks? There are so many reasons to go back to school.

The Institute for Higher Education Policy maintains that going to college leads to higher income, lower unemployment and even better health. Despite the obvious benefits, most people spend more time finding excuses not to go.

You don't have time. You can't afford it. There are no good schools nearby. And indeed, these can be difficult hurdles. But with so many compelling reasons to further your education, the excuses just don't hold up. Here are a few that might get you going this year.

➤ Life is expensive, and a college degree can help you earn more.

The American dream generally consists of nothing less than owning a home, cars and a few television sets – not to mention the opportunity to eat out at restaurants and send our kids to good schools. None of this comes cheap. For most of us, two incomes are necessary to support our lifestyles. But even then it's difficult to obtain the American dream without a college degree. Why? Because those without degrees are at a great disadvantage. The Census Bureau reports that men with bachelor's degrees had median annual earnings of about $57,000 in 2003. (Women earned about $38,000.) But men with only high school diplomas earned about $31,000, and women without college degrees earned about $21,000. With college degrees offering the potential to double your income, even if you had to outlay a significant amount of money to obtain your college degree – say $60,000, for example – you could recoup the expenditure in just two to three years.

➤ Higher education can help us face society's challenges.

A recent study by the Institute for Higher Education Policy says that the societal benefits of citizens with college educations include decreased reliance on public assistance, higher voting rates and increased volunteering. In addition, the increasing levels of diversity in schools, workplaces and society represent continuing challenges that college educations can help to overcome. Teachers must learn to teach all students effectively despite language barriers. Corporate managers must learn to lead all types of people. Social workers and counselors must understand the needs of today's society. Continuing education helps us to change with the times and meet today's challenges more effectively.

➤ A college degree can cinch career advancement and enrich your life.

The knowledge you gain from a college degree goes way beyond new skills. Attending college results in new competencies that can advance your career, as well as enrichment from new experiences that can change your life. The classroom experience will expose you to diverse people and ideas, sharpen your critical-thinking skills and enhance your confidence. The skills you'll gain can help you advance in your chosen profession, but they'll also empower you and help to provide a more secure and steady profession. According to the Institute for Higher Education Policy, 6 percent of the population nationwide age 25 and older with a high school diploma was unemployed in March 2004, compared to only 3 percent for those with a bachelor's degree. Less than one-half percent of those with a bachelor's degree received some form of public assistance in 2003, compared to 1 percent of those with a high school degree and 2.1 percent of those with less than a high school diploma.

➤ You can juggle it.

Even if you don't think you can manage the competing demands of family, work and school, it may be heartening to know that many working adult students do just that. According to the American Council on Education, today's college campuses are full of working adults who want to keep learning. In fact, almost half of today's college students are age 25 or older.

➤ Get started. Returning to school can be one of the best investments you can make in yourself. There's no doubt it will take determination and hard work, but the rewards are substantial.

Cambridge College offers programs and services specifically for adult learners. They offer classes in the evenings and on weekends, provide student services and classes over the Internet, and have conveniently located satellite centers. Cambridge College also accommodates adult learners by offering accelerated degrees through intensive weekend seminars and summer residency programs.

FUTURE UNDERSTANDING OF HEARING LOSS

The National Institute on Aging has provided a grant to the University of Michigan Health System researchers for three studies designed to uncover the causes of age-related hearing loss and possible preventive measures. This is welcome news to anyone concerned about hearing loss and its potential to induce a sense of isolation and depression in the elderly. An estimated 44% of people suffer from significant hearing loss by the time they reach age 69. Sixty-six percent experience damaged hearing by age 79 and 90% by age 80. The studies will investigate the potential effects of antioxidants on the inner ear, the role of stress pathways in hearing loss; and genetic, cellular, and hormonal factors that affect hearing as we age.

The diligence of research teams working toward bringing and keeping the hearing impaired in the mainstream is one reason for the great advances made in the hearing enhancement field. We applaud the efforts of these individuals in their recognition of the special needs of the hearing impaired. We're doing our part at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER by offering the highest quality products, comprehensive testing, and personalized, compassionate service. Concerned about your hearing? Have a free, painless hearing test at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, the first step toward better hearing. PH: 781-337-1144. Check out our website, www.familyhearing.net.

P.S. In age-related hearing loss (presbycusis), changes in the nerve tissue and cells of the inner ear, which occur as we get older, cause a gradual but steady decline in hearing ability.

A watery escape from winter

By ARTHUR POLLOCK

SCOTRUN, PA -- So you're moping around the house in the middle of another dreary New England winter. You want to take the family to a water park but it's six months till Water Country (Portsmouth, NH) opens up again and your budget gives you a dirty look when you contemplate flying your family down to Florida to visit Disney World's Typhoon Lagoon and Blizzard Beach. What's a fun-loving, water-seeking parent to do?

The dilemma has been made a bit easier with the opening of the Great Wolf Lodge Indoor Water Park, in the Pocono Mountain region of Pennsylvania. The $92 million resort officially opened its doors this fall as the first indoor waterpark in the Northeast. With the water temperature a balmy 84 degrees year round, you're assured of a guaranteed water vacation anytime.

My family of three took the plunge and drove down to the Lodge to give it a test run. It's less than six hours from Boston.

When you get to the resort, you enter into a grand lobby with a woodsy atmosphere, antler chandeliers and a glowing fireplace, and the centerpiece of a Great Clock Tower with animated forest creatures that speak and sing several times a day. The resort boasts 401 family suites and guests get their choice of 10 different configurations. We stayed in a very comfortable standard suite, nicely appointed with pine bed boards and dresser drawers. All the rooms are hooked up for wireless Internet and are equipped with microwave, fridge and Nintendo video games.

Further up the scale were children's themed suites such as the "Wolf Den" and "Kid Cabin," which feature a "room within a room" for kids, complete with bunk beds and flat screen TVs.

The rooms are all just fine once you actually enter them, but getting in was a bit of a hassle. Upon check-in, you are issued a wrist-band, which acts both as your pass to the waterpark and as your room key. You're supposed to hold the band up to a sensor on your door for entry but either I am technically challenged or they still need to work out the bugs in this system.

I guarantee that you won't be spending much time in the room though. The 78,000 square foot waterpark is varied enough to keep you entertained for hours. Though the resort offers arts and crafts activities throughout the day through their "Cub Club," for children 12 and under, we hardly availed ourselves of the service. Our seven-year-old daughter rarely wanted to leave the pool area. And with eleven waterslides, six pools and a four-story treehouse waterfort, who could blame her?

With dozens of lifeguards on the premises, water safety wasn't an issue. The only medical issue I was concerned about was possibly suffering a panic attack, myself, as I climbed up four flights of stairs to accompany my daughter on the somewhat intimidating family water roller coaster. Called the Hydro Plunge, this monster of a ride sneaks in a 52-foot vertical drop that is not for the faint-hearted. A 76-year-old grandma from New Jersey also climbing the stairs with me gave me courage. Although my heart was fibrillating, I am happy to report that I did survive the experience, albeit with eyes closed most of the way.

After getting that ride under my belt, the others were much less terrifying. Some of the other tube slides actually take you outside the waterpark before twisting back inside. You can tell you're outside when the air suddenly feels cold. For the younger set, four kiddie slides gently drop riders off into the water. A wave pool lets you body surf to your heart's content. Water basketball, float pools and whirlpools are other enticing options.

The treehouse waterfort, Fort Mackenzie, is the park's signature attraction offering 12 levels of water fun, mischief and mayhem. It's a dizzying array of rope suspension bridges, cargo nets and web crawls, where kids can squirt each other with water hoses and drop water buckets on unsuspecting passers-by below. Every eight minutes or so, bells start ringing, signaling that a thousand-gallon water bucket is about to tip over and drench the shrieking hoards 48 feet below. Watching the cascading water come down is about the best water spectacle you can see this side of Niagara Falls.

All this swimming and sliding works up your appetite and the Lodge doesn't let you down here. Several family-friendly eateries are open day and night to take care of your hunger pangs. The main dining areas serve meals buffet style (you can opt for full buffet or a la carte). You'll find all the comfort food you could possibly want plus more trendy offerings like sushi and portabello mushroom wraps. There are impossibly cute-sounding kids' drinks offered like Polar Punch and Bears in a Blizzard. I was happy to find my own fun drink -- Barley Creek Brown Antler Ale, made by a local microbrewery.

Other amenities at the resort include a fitness center which actually lets supervised children use the equipment, an enormous video arcade room plus an Aveda Concept Spa. My wife gave the Spa high marks after her massage and pedicure.

A nice evening ritual is the nightly story time near the fireplace in the lobby. Kids are invited to show up in their pajamas and hopefully get the hint that it's time to wind down.

It all adds up to a fun, weather-proof family vacation. On the ride back to Boston, I felt pretty pleased with myself, almost as if I had earned a Cub Scout merit badge, for by the end of our stay I was able to keep my eyes open the whole time on the scary ride.

Rates at Great Wolf Lodge are $279 to $500 per night, but look for online specials starting at $179.

Town could curb selling door-to-door

Selectmen float solicitation bylaw

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen may bring an article before Town Meeting April 1 to help put some rules in place for door-to-door solicitation.

In October, selectman Ralph Dormitzer reported he had been contacted by a number of residents who were concerned with the increase in solicitation, especially during dusk. Tuesday, he came back before the board with a sample bylaw from the town of Duxbury which could be modified to meet Cohasset's needs.

Cohasset does not have any bylaws regulating solicitation and Dormitzer said in his research, he found there is nothing that can be done to stop solicitation in a town altogether. There are a number of Supreme Court rulings which protect the practice under freedom of speech, he said. "You can't limit it," said Dormitzer, but rules can be put in place that will ensure there are some regulations on who can solicit and when.

Dormitzer said the bylaw would require solicitors register with the police department "So you'd always know who's in town," he said. Solicitors would be required to give very detailed information, including their social security number, which would allow the department to look into the background of each person and ensure they and the company they work for are legitimate. He said that way, residents could feel confident there were no sexual predators or any other criminals wandering the streets, knocking on doors. However, he pointed out the research done on the matter indicates there is no

Speaker shares personal message of peace

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Comfort food, uplifting songs, an African dance, and an inspirational speaker — who put the responsibility of making a difference on individuals and churches — helped honor the lives and legacies of Martin Luther King and Rosa Parks at Monday's annual Martin Luther King Day breakfast.

Dr. King would have been 77 years old on Sunday. While the life of the leader of the civil rights' movement was cut short by an assassin's bullet nearly 38 years ago – his message of non violence was not, although much of the world still struggles with the concept.

Parks, who passed away in October at 92, made history with an act of courage that has emboldened untold millions to stand up for themselves. Parks' arrest in December 1955 for civil disobedience after she refused to give up her seat on a bus to a white passenger sparked the Montgomery, Ala. bus boycott. King, then 26, was an organizer of the boycott.

Clementina "Tina" Chery, who was guest speaker at Monday's breakfast that was sponsored by the Cohasset Diversity Committee and Cohasset clergy, spoke from her heart to the upwards of 100 packed into Bates Hall at the Second Congregational Church.

She wondered aloud, "what would Dr. King do today; what would he say, what would he ask of us to prevent youth violence in our schools, homes."

Chery, who heads Dorchester's Louis D. Brown Peace Institute named after her son, is an outspoken crusader against youth violence. She knows the subject well; her son, Louis was one of 98 homicide victims in Boston in 1993. Louis, 15, who had a promising future, was the victim of gang-related shooting just a few blocks from his home while he was on his way to a Christmas party hosted by a non-violence program.

Clementina Chery of the Louis D. Brown Peace Institute speaks to the crowd gathered at the Second Congregational Church hall on Martin Luther King Day.

"Those that do have a foundation are not coming out loud enough to bring it to the forefront. We're all sitting in our own comfort zone within our own communities."

— Clementina Chery, Louis D. Brown Peace Institute

Chery, who shared with the audience her spiritual journey toward peace, said in response to youth violence, King would not ask for more police but would ask "us to turn to God;" she stressed that churches need to get more involved in helping youths find better ways to channel their anger. "The work we do belongs very much in the churches," she said. Chery explained how through her faith she has been able to use her anger for positive change.

The Louis D. Peace Institute, founded in 1994, helps the families of homicide victims through the grieving process and helps them work with the criminal justice system; the Louis D. Peace Institute Curriculum teaches the values of peace at schools. The institute's seven core principles are love, unity, faith, hope, courage, justice and forgiveness, she said.

In response to a question from the audience, Chery explained it is critical to acknowledge anger and put forward a safe place where anger can be expressed and dealt with.

"Everyone else wants more police and to put a child in jail…but our mission is to look at peace to create awareness," she said.

She said economic depravation is not at the heart of youth violence but a lack of a solid foundation in core values is.

Cohasset constructs housing committee

Partnership could have nine members

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Housing Partnership Committee is taking root. Four residents have expressed interest in serving, and once a new housing consultant is hired by the town, selectmen will make the committee appointments.

So far Helen (Taffy) Nothnagle of Atlantic Avenue, Jim Hamilton of King Street, Tana Carlson of Old Coach Road, and Stephen Lucitt of Jerusalem Road, have sent letters to selectmen expressing interest in serving on the partnership.

Once appointed, members will be responsible for providing perspectives on creating affordable housing. They will be guided by the rules and regulations of the Massachusetts Housing Partnership, which can provide financial assistance, training sessions and resource materials.

Forming a partnership has been in the works for a few months. "At first, there wasn't much of a turnout," said Town Manager Bill Griffin, but he added as questions surfaced regarding the Cook project and other affordable housing issues, residents began to understand the importance of having a housing partnership and wanted to become involved.

Affordable housing is currently one of the most important items on the town's radar screen. Griffin said he has worked with housing partnerships in the past, and they have proven to be very beneficial. Typically, partnerships are made up of between seven and nine residents which represent all facets of the community from the clergy, to business owners, to concerned citizens. "We will be hiring a consultant to help the committee know its role," he said. The partnership is a new concept for the town so for those participating, having an expert on hand will make for a smooth beginning, he said.

"What really got to me was that so much work had been done by so many people in Cohasset over the past few years and they came up with a project for which there is no population."

— Tana Carlson, candidate for housing partnership

Griffin recently sent out a Request for Proposals for the position and received back one bid. The position was awarded to Bob Engler, but due to the fact that he had worked for Taggart McCall Properties on the private Cedarmere development, Town Counsel ruled there was a conflict and the position has now been sent back out to bid. Proposals are due by Friday, Jan. 27.

Selectmen agreed it made sense to appoint the committee once a consultant is hired who can guide the process along. The new consultant will be able to

Cohasset sees how it measures up

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When buying a new car, consumers often complete side-by-side comparisons with similar models to ensure they will get the most for their money. In Cohasset, that same practice is being put into place for the municipal budget.

Cohasset recently received a "benchmarking" report, compiled to help the town see how it measures up against peer communities with comparable attributes. The town paid Municipal Benchmarking LLC — a Waltham company that analyzes town spending and prepares reports to aid in the budgeting process — roughly $7,500 to compile the report.

A joint meeting was held Wednesday with members of the advisory committee, school department, water department, library, fire and police departments, capital budget committee, the town manager and Municipal Benchmarking LLC, to introduce the town to the report and come up with ways to use the information going forward.

Advisory committee chairman Donna McGee said the idea to invest in a benchmarking report was originally floated as a way to determine whether there might be a way to help curb spending and avoid overrides by looking at the way other towns operate. However, she said since the idea was floated to purchase the report, there has been a concern that the information will be provided, but soon forgotten. "We need to figure out how we can institutionalize this. Let's not stick it on a shelf," she said.

The report, dubbed "The Municipal Yardstick," compares Cohasset with 20 other communities specifically chosen for their demographic similarity. Those communities are Topsfield, Manchester-By-the-Sea, Southborough, Wenham, Sherborn, Lynnfield, Boxborough, Dover, Wayland, Marblehead, Lincoln, Swampscott, Westwood, Medfield, Carlisle, Hamilton, Norwell, Duxbury, Marion, and Hingham.

Ken Strachan from Municipal Benchmarking explained the 20 communities are chosen based on 15 variables, covering demographic, socioeconomic and geographic data. He said when the numbers were originally run, Marion and Hingham were not in the top-20 list of comparable towns, but often his company will allow towns to swap out two or three of their top-20 towns for other towns they would like to see themselves measured up against. He said Cohasset chose to include Marion and Hingham instead of its number 19 and 20 towns. Incidentally, Hingham and Marion would have been numbers 23 and 34 respectively, and therefore Strachan said including their data would not greatly skew Cohasset's results.

At Wednesday's meeting, the specifics of the report were not discussed, as some departments had not had a chance to go through the 250-page report, but everyone seemed excited about delving into it. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he has already been working with the data provided. "This is probably the first time the town has come close to having this much data about itself and its peers," he said.

Griffin said now that the information has arrived, it will be important for all departments to sort through it and really determine which towns Cohasset is comparable with.

Griffin said he has started his own data collection process with the information compiled on the fire department. He said after making some phone calls, he has found there are legitimate reasons why Cohasset's department may look as if it is spending more than other similar communities. He said he has found some in Cohasset's peer group have mostly volunteer firefighters where Cohasset has a paid staff, and some do not run their own ambulance service as Cohasset does. "There are apples and apples, but there are oranges out there," he said, and there must be a human element applied to the data.

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said she thinks the report will be "incredibly helpful," but at first glance she too noted there are some towns Cohasset can't be compared with in terms of educational expenses as they have either kindergarten through grade six or grade eight, and regional high schools which split the costs between towns. "We are not considered above average unless you factor in those K-6 and K-8 schools," she said.

While there will be much information to be digested, advisory committee member James Gilman, who has been a driving force behind bringing benchmarking to town said it is an exercise that will be of great value. "This is the most valid data we're going to get," he said, adding Cohasset may be able to find ways to save money and be more cost-effective, potentially avoiding overrides in the future, by looking at the different practices taking place in similar towns and making an evaluation as to whether the way things have historically been done is the best.

Advisory committee member Tucker Glavin concurred and said the report will help the town decide how it wants to manage itself and really take a good look at what its priorities are. He said the town may look at its spending and decide it has allocated funds based on what it values and nothing should change. "If the town is the number one spender per capita, that is a decision the town makes," he said, adding he is sure the report will become a part of the discussion for many long-term decisions going forward.

Selectmen float bylaw to curb solicitation in town

real evidence there is a high risk of crime from door-to-door solicitation.

Duxbury's bylaw has certain exceptions to those who must register to solicit. There is an "under 18" clause which means groups such as the Girl and Boy Scouts or local sports teams would not be required to register with the police department in order to ask their neighbors for support. In addition, those running for public office are spared the registration process in Duxbury, which Dormitzer joked some on the Cohasset board of selectmen might be happy to hear.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he thought the bylaw was a good idea, but added he would like to see some limitation on when solicitation must stop for the day. He said perhaps an hour before dusk would be an appropriate time. "It can be very intimidating when someone shows up at your door in the dark," he said.

"It can be very intimidating when someone shows up at your door in the dark."
— Selectman Michael Sullivan

However, Dormitzer said he has found in the Supreme Court rulings that it is not legal to limit solicitation in the early evening because "that is the most probable time people will be home. That is likely to interfere with freedom of speech," he said. He said it might be possible for the town to impose a solicitation curfew of 9 or 10 p.m., which would provide ample time during those hours when people typically come home from work. Sullivan pointed out 9 p.m. can have more of an impact at different times of the year, and in his opinion, it is still too late.

Selectman Chairman Fred Koed said 1-1/2 hours after dusk seems like an appropriate cut-off point for solicitation. But Dormitzer said it simply won't be legal due to the rulings which have already come down on the matter. "Let's fight it all the way," Koed joked.

Dormitzer assembled information for board members to look over including the Duxbury bylaw and some Supreme Court rulings on the matter. He said he would give selectmen time to read it all over, and they agreed to discuss the issue at an upcoming meeting.

Town begins to build housing partnership

meet with the candidates for the committee and explain the roles they will be taking on prior to the committee being formed. Griffin said having a group of people that can build institutional knowledge will be indispensable in the future.

Griffin said one of the major projects the committee will handle is finalizing the town's draft affordable housing plan so that it can be adopted and become part of the town's master plan. The committee will also play a role in the affordable components of the Cedarmere and Cook Estate senior housing projects.

Selectmen asked interested candidates to come before the board for an introduction Tuesday. Carlson was the only one able to attend, which means the three other candidates will be scheduled for upcoming meetings.

Carlson said she has a great interest in affordable housing for a variety of reasons. Being of "that age," where her children are out of the house and downsizing is beginning to sound like a good option, she has become very interested in the options available for those 55 and older. In addition, the 33-year resident has a background working with Fleet Bank on various affordable housing projects from the 1980s through the 1990s which she believes could be beneficial for the town.

"What really got to me was that so much work had been done by so many people in Cohasset over the past few years and they came up with a project for which there is no population. I thought, 'how can that be'?" she said, referring to the Cook project. While the project has an affordable component, Cohasset residents won't qualify to live there because they can't pass the asset tests required by the state.

Carlson said she is very familiar with the different rules and regulations that govern affordable housing. She said it is important for the town to realize the definition of "affordable" is different for everyone and the town has to make sure it is truly providing for the needs of its citizens.

Griffin said he will likely be appointing a new housing consultant by the last week of January. In the meantime, selectmen will continue to hold informal interviews with interested candidates. Any residents who are interested in participating on the committee should send a letter of interest to the board of selectmen at 41 Highland Avenue.

Cedarmere project is moving ahead

Jim Smalanskas of Leggat McCall Properties, which is building the Cedarmere senior housing development, came before the planning board Jan. 11 to give an update on progress being made. Smalanskas said to date, two foundations have been poured and construction on those units should begin within the next two weeks. Construction will begin on additional units in the spring.

Smalanskas said there has been some blasting taking place on the site during this phase of construction and it should be finished within two weeks. He said residents who are not within the area required for notice of blasting may call the Cedarmere office at (781) 383-4030 for more information on the blasting schedule.

Zoning changes slated for Town Meeting docket

Downtown floated as top priority

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The stage has been set for some significant zoning issues to come before Town Meeting April 1. Tuesday was the deadline to submit articles for the Warrant, and the planning board has drafted five for the town's consideration. The recommendations come, in part, as a result of work done by the economic growth and development committee. The group has been working together since October to come up with ideas on how to boost commercial tax revenue in Cohasset.

Planning board member Mike Westcott, who is an ex-officio member of the economic growth and development committee, has kept the planning board abreast of that committee's work to date.

On the table is reducing the amount of parking spaces required in the highway, technology, and light industry business districts — essentially Rte. 3A. With a reduction in parking space requirements from 10 to five parking spaces per 1,000 square feet of public space, businesses would be encouraged to expand and make the most out of their property. Taxes are charged by the square foot, which means bigger buildings provide more tax revenue for the town.

Transit Oriented Districts, which allow for changes in local zoning regulations in those areas within a specific distance from public transportation, are also getting support. TODs encourage mixed-use buildings that provide services for commuters at ground level and some apartments on the upper levels.

To go along with the theme of mixed-use development, the planning board and economic growth and development committee are also in favor of rezoning the downtown village district to encourage mixed-use development. That means zoning requirements would be amended to make it possible to have buildings which have office or retail space on the lower level, and residential above.

Planning board member Peter Pratt said while he did not want to give some articles priority over the others, as they are all equally important, the zoning which deals with the downtown business district should be at the top of the list. He said local developer Wayne Sawchuk has a plan to build senior housing in the village and local zoning regulations are stalling its progress.

Sawchuk and his business partner Robert Fesler of Dresden, Maine, have plans to upgrade the Samuel Bates House, also known as the "1811 building," which houses businesses located at 35 to 39 South Main St., including Bia Bistro. Currently, the building has two apartments on the upper level, which Sawchuk said will remain the same. Business tenants in the lower levels would also keep their spaces.

Sawchuk said he would like to build a three-story building behind the 1811 building that will have retail or office space on the first floor, six apartments on the second floor, and six apartments on the third floor. Sawchuk said he envisions the entire building creating more pedestrian traffic flow for the businesses that already operate in the village.

However, zoning regulations in the downtown business district have precluded Sawchuk from being able to bring his vision to fruition. While the planning board gave its OK, the zoning board of appeals stopped the project in its tracks because it would require variances, which are difficult to obtain.

Pratt said Sawchuk and his team have been "pushed from pillar to post unfairly in this building. He has neither bylaw change nor zoning relief."

In addition, Pratt said he believes it is time to put one of the town's newest zoning bylaws to rest and sunset the Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw. The town adopted the overlay bylaw at the November 2002 Special Town Meeting, as a way to get out from under the threat of 40B projects. Under 40B, developers can come into a town and build senior housing complexes which provide affordable housing options, but skirt around local zoning regulations. The state ultimately has the final say on what is built with 40B projects.

Developers who build projects under the SMROD bylaw are allowed to build more densely than the town's zoning regulations allow (10 units per acre). In return, 25 percent of the project's units must be deemed affordable by state standards. Affordable units must remain affordable for a minimum of 30 years.

Pratt said he would like to see the Cook Estate — which is the second and most current project to file under the SMROD bylaw — as the last development built under the bylaw. "We need to get control of the multi-family developments," he said.

However, Westcott said he was very concerned about potentially sunsetting the SMROD bylaw. He said even though the article, if passed, would allow the Cook Estate to move forward as planned, people "feel so passionate about it" that he could see the bylaw change turning into a problem.

Planning board member Stuart Ivimey said if the board is able to get the word out to the public about the sunsetting and make sure residents understand it will not affect the Cook project in any way, there may not be as many problems as Westcott anticipates.

Pratt said he would like to see another bylaw amended. He said while it has come up before, he would like to see the large home site plan review bylaw amended to give the planning board "a full regulatory approach" to large home review.

While chairman Al Moore said he thought the ideas were good, he pointed out they would make "several changes to the town's bylaws. It could be a logistics nightmare."

Moore suggested rather than bringing six articles forward for the spring Town Meeting, "Maybe we should just get three ready for primetime. The others won't die a slow death, they may just have to wait until the next Town Meeting."

"None of these is a slam dunk, it's very tricky to get them passed," he said.

Pratt said the articles would be reviewed with the zoning advisory committee — a committee which had fizzled out but was recently reinstated and is comprised of representatives from various town boards. The purpose of the ZAC is to study and report periodically to the planning board to recommend updates to the zoning bylaw and zoning map. "If we do our job with the ZAC, I'd be happy to go to the microphone for any one of these," Pratt said.

The articles which were submitted to the town are essentially placeholders and the final language will be run by Town Counsel before any are placed on the Warrant. Articles will be withdrawn if it is determined there is not enough time for them to be fully vetted prior to Town Meeting.

CHILL OUT EVERYONE

Hey Cohasset, how is everyone doing for the New Year? Resolutions are hard to work on and keep unless they were realistic and achievable. Keep up the good work as we all work towards our goals. Also, as we drive through town(or around the town and streets due to closed and detoured routes) keep in mind the need for understanding and patience. It is frustrating at times but speeding and doing crazy things won't help anything or anyone.

Life is to short to sweat the little things and having to drive an extra 2-3 minutes out of our way really isn't that big of a deal in the big picture, is it?

DEAN'S LIST

Saint Anselm College announced the dean's list for the first semester and Amanda Watts, CHS graduate of 2006 and daughter of Karla and James was on the list. Great work Amanda.

WINTER GRADUATE

Hats off to Cohasset's Margo Doherty on her graduation from Quincy College Jan. 7. Margo was one of 164 graduates who filled the Marriott in Quincy, along with their family and friends, for the big day. All the best for a bright future, Margo!

UNIFIED DESIGN

Cohasset welcomes Julie Moir Messervy discussing "Outside the Not So Big House: Creating the Landscape of Home", on Thu. Feb. 9 at 7 p.m. at Buttonwood Books. Ms. Messervy will host a power point presentation and a question and answer discussion about her new book written with Sarah Susanka. In the book, these two experts show homeowners and professionals how to break down design barriers between the home and its surroundings to create a unified design — the landscape of home. Messervy writes, "A home is more than mere shelter — it is our own special realm upon the earth. " Outside the Not So Big House" is about inhabiting the broader landscape of home rather than simply existing in a house.

Refreshments will be served. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. If you are unable to attend and would like to purchase a signed book, please call Buttonwood at 1-781-383-2665 or order online at www.buttonwoodbooks.com.

BIRD CLUB

The South Shore Bird Club will hold its annual meeting and potluck supper Saturday, Jan. 21, at 6 p.m. at the First Parish Unitarian Church Hall, 24 River St., Norwell. Members and newcomers alike are welcome.

Participants should bring their favorite main dish, salad or dessert. Anyone who has taken some interesting slides of birds or bird-related travel is encouraged to bring up to 15 and give them to David Clapp upon arrival for viewing following dinner and the meeting.

The South Shore Bird Club promotes the enjoyment of birding and nature through field trips and educational endeavors. Its goals are to increase the appreciation of birds, provide education on birding and keep records to help understand trends in bird populations. Traditional activities include the Christmas Bird Count, Breeding Bird Surveys and Big Days, all of which provide annual snapshots of local bird populations. Many shorter trips are interspersed to accommodate busy schedules while introducing people to birding and to many of the wildlife preserves in the Greater Boston area with an emphasis on the South Shore. For more information, call Cohasset's Sally Avery, 781-383-6043.

That is all for this week. Send in news, thoughts and well wishes to me no later than Tuesdays by 5 p.m.

MLK Day speaker shares personal message of peace

"Those that do have a foundation are not coming out loud enough to bring it to the forefront," she said. "We're all sitting in our own comfort zone within our own communities."

Chery, who comes from Central America, said as a child she did not know she was poor. "I was never hungry or dirty and there was always a sense of community," she said.

Monday's event also included an African dance performed by Deer Hill fourth-graders Ki'Shayla Fonfield and Angel Hunter. The Second Congregational Church middle school youth chorus, with Vincent Kennedy providing accompaniment, sang "Border Song" from the 1960s by Elton John and Bernie Taupin.

The Rev. Gary Ritts, who served as emcee of the event, described Chery as a "tremendous asset to our area and more importantly to the families in Boston.

"I'm so very pleased with the tremendous response of the community at large — those who organized, those who participated, those who attended — from all around the area," he said about Monday's breakfast. "And most especially for the deeply moving and inspiring message shared by Tina Chery.

"I hope her 'ministry' of peace continues to grow and that Cohasset can expand its support of her efforts," he said.

Chartis Tebbetts, who co-chairs the Cohasset Diversity Committee with Susan Etkind, said the committee is pleased the Martin Luther King Jr. Breakfast has gained a regular spot in the calendar of the town, and that the Cohasset Clergy Association has become its primary sponsor and organizer.

"The churches seem to be very comfortable with rotating the opportunity to host and present the program," Tebbetts said. "This year's celebration was just the right balance of recognizing Dr. King's legacy, and hearing about the wonderful work of a new organization with its own charismatic leader! The entertainment, food, and overflow crowd made it a most memorable occasion."

Blood drive Feb. 1

To help ensure an adequate blood supply, the American Red Cross joins with Cohasset in the hope that residents will take some time out of their busy lives to give the Gift of Life. This year's Red Cross Blood Drive will be held Wednesday, Feb. 1, at St. Anthony's Parish Hall, 10 Summer St., from 1 to 7 p.m. Childcare will be available from 3 to 5 p.m. All donors will receive an entry into the weekly "Warm Your Heart" drawing for $200 toward monthly heating costs.

To give blood, potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in good health. Most medications and medical conditions do not prohibit a person from being a blood donor. Donors can give blood safely every eight weeks. To make an appointment to donate call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 781-383-1290, or the Red Cross Blood Services at 1-800-448-3543, or visit www.givelife.org. For information on the blood donation process and current eligibility guidelines visit www.newenglandblood.org.

Deer Hill School to pilot new internet-based enrichment program

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Students fill out a questionnaire which determines their interests and creates a profile based on topics and learning styles that work well for each specific student.

Deer Hill will soon be piloting a new kind of learning program. For 30-days, some fifth-grade students will be chosen to test out the Renzulli Learning System, which uses the same teaching methods provided in gifted education programs to students from all ability levels.

At the Jan. 5 school committee meeting, Gara Field — a former teacher and representative from Renzulli Learning who works with the program's creators, Joseph Renzulli and Sally Reis, at the University of Connecticut — explained what the program entails.

Renzulli Learning is an Internet-based search engine and profiler that matches how students learn to thousands of enrichment activities. Students fill out a questionnaire which determines their interests and a profile is created based on topics and learning styles that work well for each specific student. Students must sign in using a username and password each time they wish to access the program.

Once the learning style and interests are determined, the program provides challenging activities in 14 different learning categories. For example, the program offers activities in the categories of virtual fieldtrips, critical thinking, and contests and competitions. While the categories are the same for every student, the activities under the category are specifically catered to the student's needs, based on the answers from the questionnaires.

The program benefits teachers as well. Once a student has created a profile, it becomes available to the teacher, who can then see how that child answered the questionnaire. Teachers can then easily determine which kinds of activities the child likes best, which areas they excel in, and can use that information while teaching lessons. The program also provides tips for how to teach in a way that caters to the child's learning style.

Field said the program began last spring and schools from New York City to Montana are using it. "This is one of many tools for education," she said, meaning it will not replace any classroom activities, only add to the curriculum already being learned. She said often children who are on individualized education plans or special education students thrive with Renzulli learning because it is catered so specifically to their interests and learning style.

Deer Hill Principal Keith Gauley said school council surveys conducted last year indicated parents wanted to see more enrichment programs for accelerated learners. As a result, he began looking into different programs and found the Renzulli system. While he said it will provide a need for those students who exhibit gifted behaviors (the Renzulli system does not label children as being gifted, but differentiates that some students exhibit gifted behaviors) it is also inclusive, meaning it can be used by all students. Cohasset schools strive to provide the best and most diverse education for all students as it can, and "Renzulli is one part of that answer," he said. "It's high-end learning for all kids."

Gauley said he is not sure how the students who pilot the program will be chosen, but he does know that there will only be subscriptions for 30 children. Schools who wish to pilot the program receive a free 30-day trial for 30 students. Gauley said there is a good possibility the program will be piloted after school because no child should be taken out of the classroom to participate. There is the possibility the program will become part of Deer Hill's EMC^3 afterschool enrichment program.

If the school decides to purchase the program, it would sign up for a one-year subscription. Subscriptions run for the calendar year, not the school year. While a firm price has not yet been discussed, money to cover the cost has been included in the programs and licensed software line item in the fiscal 2007 school budget, which totals $6,850.

Field said Renzulli likes to make the product available for as many schools as possible, and "If anything, they want to get the price lower." She said that is why the more subscriptions which are purchased for students, the more the price goes down. The school department plans to purchase 101 subscriptions.

At this point, subscriptions are only allowed to be purchased through a school system, meaning parents may not purchase subscriptions from home. Once a child is enrolled through the school, the program is accessible via the Internet, which means it can be used from a home computer.

Curriculum coordinator Nancy Mrzyglod said she is very excited about the program and added it taps into the school's technology resources, which is great. Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said she thought the program was "cutting edge."

School committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said she thought the program sounded like a good idea and said after the 30-day trial, the school will be able to get feedback from students, and track how it was used, and then decide if they want to make it available to everyone.

For those students who are not chosen to participate in the piloting of the program, Renzulli also provides materials for classroom enrichment which are separate from the computer-based learning system.

For more information on the Renzulli Learning system, please visit the company's Web site at www.renzullilearning.com.

Déjà vu

This time of year, there is always a disconnect between the town and school department over budgetary needs. In short, the schools are seeking an increase well beyond what the town can afford without an override. So what's new?

In prior years, former Supt. of Schools Edward Malvey's initial requests hovered in the 7-8 percent range over the prior year's budget. Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh is coming out of the gate with a 13-1/2 percent increase, roughly $1.67 million over last year.

There are those who will question the need; we won't. Determining what the schools need to continue to provide the education that Cohasset residents expect is the purview of the school committee.

But it is also the school committee's job to direct the superintendent to come up with a budget that is realistic; one that has a chance of being fully funded.

We're not sure what the strategy is here. Ask for the sky and then the taxpayers might be relieved to accept a 7-8 percent increase?

The schools need to come up with a budget that fits within Town Manager Bill Griffin's guidelines and let us know what is at stake without more money. They need to enumerate for us exactly how many teaching positions would be lost and at what levels, and what services would be reduced or eliminated.

A proposed level-services budget would also be helpful, as well as one with new initiatives. Then the taxpayers can have a clear picture of what stands to be gained or lost. It's not difficult to do, the Hingham School Department [which, by the way, presents the press with a budget binder on day one that is added to at every meeting] uses that format.

Time is growing short, the budget season is in full swing. The town side of the budget is getting nailed down while the schools, in our view, are once again coming late to the community table.

No one should blame Cohasset homeowners, who pay some of the highest taxes in the state, for not doing cartwheels and flips over the prospect of another override vote. Cohasset voters have stepped up to the plate time and time again and opened their wallets.

They deserve to fully understand what the school department is asking for this time around.

As your eyes and ears, it's difficult for the Mariner to report fully when copies of budget materials are often not available during the discussion at school committee meetings, only afterwards.

In our view, information is always a positive. Our readers understand budgets are in flux and subject to change. The school department should put all the cards on the table before any more time passes.

Good change

As New Englanders we often abhor change. In a perfect world, we would all like to hold onto our quaint, small-town atmosphere and keep developers at bay.

But some development can be a positive. We're excited about the ideas floated by the economic development committee about the future of Rte. 3A. Clearly the economic development committee and planning board are "thinking outside the box." What a concept!

Creative thinkers and leaders are needed in Cohasset more than ever.

In the village, Wayne Sawchuk has presented plans for a mix of retail and affordable housing for seniors. But his downtown plans to expand the Samuel Bates House could have been stalled permanently by zoning restrictions. However, with the help of the zoning advisory committee, the planning board intends to present a Town Meeting article that would amend the current zoning bylaw and allow those plans to go forward.

For those interested in following this issue, the zoning advisory committee meets at 7 p.m. Mondays, Jan. 23 and Jan. 30 in the Basement Meeting Room at Town Hall.

Showing respect for our language

ALL I KNOW IS . . .

WILLIAM SPROUT

Even so, there is one thing to be said in Mr. Bush's defense: he never said he could speak or write English well, and, to his credit, he has never shied away from providing ample evidence of that fact.

A national study, reported by Sam Dillon in the New York Times, Dec. 16, 2005, page A28, indicated that literacy among American college graduates had declined "significantly over the past decade." The test, administered in 2003 by the Department of Education and called the National Assessment of Adult Literacy, found that only 31 percent of the graduates scored at the proficient level, whereas in 1992, which is the most recent testing time before 2003, 40 percent scored at the proficient level. The report blamed the "rising number of young Americans in recent years (who) had spent their free time watching television and surfing the internet." It seems to me that only mentioning two possible reasons is too limited. There are, I would submit, many other possible causes: affection for video games, failure of the parents to speak properly in the home, failure to teach grammar in the classroom, shallowness and superficiality among some teenagers, a loss of cultural values, and a lack of respect for the English language — the only native language today's abusers of English will ever have.

When one realizes that not even one third of America's college graduates are proficient in English, the "Frontline" report last week revealing the academic inadequacies of American students in comparison to Belgian students should have come as no surprise. Educators have long known that, globally, K-4 American students generally compare well to K-4 students from other countries, after which a separation begins to occur academically, quite evident by the eighth grade and pronounced by the 12th grade, by which time American students have, in general, lost a great deal of ground.

I saw this gap between American high school students and French high school students a few years ago when, for three years, I served as an Assistant d'anglais in a French lycée in Paris called Janson de Sailly, located in the posh 16th arrondissement. Often the seniors and juniors I taught there had a better command of English than American high school students do, as well as a much greater interest in being proficient. I also was delighted that the French frequently corrected my French, so that I could improve and so that they could feel proud of their language and literature. This pattern also applied when I went to Spain and Germany to learn Spanish and German. Most Americans hesitate to correct a foreigner who makes a mistake in English and this attitude is itself a mistake. I could never have learned three foreign languages in five years without the interest and cooperation of many native speakers. The grammatical errors that are noted in this column are made in the same spirit: learn the rules of grammar, accept benign criticism so that you will improve, and show respect for your language.

Of course, besides our national indifference to learning other languages and cultures, we have now an additional problem: our own President George W. Bush struggles with the English language as ferociously as Daniel Webster fought with the Devil. As a result, we rarely hear or read the English language used correctly in political discourse. Instead, we encounter the following: about a month ago Mr. Bush was taking questions from a group of reporters at the White House about the unfavorable Amnesty International report concerning America's alleged abuse of prisoners in Cuba and Iraq. Mr. Bush replied that Amnesty International was "disassembling." He then added, for the benefit of anyone who might not understand his impressive use of English, that "disassembling" meant "lying." Several of the reporters guffawed but none was impressed. Why? The word that Mr. Bush had meant to use was "dissembling" (to hide or disguise one's true feelings), not "disassembling" (to take to pieces), and he had boldly exposed his ignorance.

Although our nation has gradually adjusted to Mr. Bush's solecisms, faulty syntax, dangling modifiers, faulty parallelism and other infelicitous and inappropriate grammatical impossibilities, it must be a bit unsettling to many Americans to know that they speak better English than their president. Even so, there is one thing to be said in Mr. Bush's defense: he never said he could speak or write English well, and, to his credit, he has never shied away from providing ample evidence of that fact. One critic calls it NGELB (No Grammatical Error Left Behind).

There are, however, millions of professionals who have been forced to make the commitment, overtly or by implication, to speak and write English correctly, by virtue of their line of work. They are the journalists, copy editors, TV reporters, regional editors, free lancers, managing editors, TV news directors, news writers, ministers, professors, TV weathermen, lawyers and public speakers of all ilk who fill the rooms, air waves and pages of print every day but who, sadly, have only a limited knowledge of their native language. Since speaking and writing English correctly are essential to their craft, why do they allow themselves to err? As professionals, are they indifferent to what a professional communicator should be able to do: write and speak English correctly? If you heard a musician playing his instrument poorly, would you not feel that the musician should first learn how to play before performing in public? Most Americans, doubting their own knowledge of their own language, assume that, if it appears on TV or is printed in a newspaper, it must be grammatically correct. Not so.

Here are some examples of what I mean:

1. Dr. Phil - About a month and a half ago, Dr. Phil was discussing on his program an unusual ménage à trois involving a married man, his wife and his mistress. The married man had recently impregnated both wife and mistress, who was married and lived across the street. Dr. Phil asked this philandering spouse, "And what gave you the right to lay with another man's wife?" No. Dr. Phil should have said to lie. There are two verbs, to lay and to lie. The first verb is transitive. It means "to place," and takes an object, as in "I lay the book on the table." The simple past is I laid and the present perfect is I have laid. The other verb is intransitive. It means "to rest," and does not take a direct object, as in I lie down. The simple past is I lay down and the present perfect is I have lain down. The tendency of Americans challenged by grammar is to use only to lay for both verbs, as Dr. Phil did. There is reason for confusion: I lay is the present tense of to lay and the simple past of to lie. Also, I have lain down, though correct, strikes those grammatically challenged as archaic and I have had students tell me that no such tense exists. That is why they are students.

As a footnote, let me mention that, on the several occasions when I have had surgery that required hospitalization, all doctors and nurses have said to me, if I was sitting up in bed, "OK, now lay back," instead of "lie back." On one occasion, when I had been in the hospital for several days and had heard every doctor and every nurse make this same mistake, out of pure curiosity, I asked why they did not say, "lie back." To a person - doctor or nurse - they swore that "lay back" was correct and, when challenged, they simply said, "Well, whatever." No. I am glad to report that their medical knowledge exceeded their knowledge of English, which after all was the main point in this case. However, do not make any assumptions about whether a doctor or a nurse speaks English correctly or not. The ones I have met, as a unified group, do not.

2. Dr. Phil — Last week, Dr. Phil had Starr, from "The View," as his special celebrity friend, on his program to plug her new book and explain how she had recently lost 150 pounds. As the first guest took her seat next to Starr and opposite to Dr. Phil, he said to his guest, "Well, you have already heard Starr and I talking, haven't you?" No. Starr and me talking. With pronouns, there are case endings: Nominative or subject (I), Genitive or Possessive (my), Dative or Indirect Object (me), and Accusative or Direct Object (me). Me in this instance is the Indirect Object (put to in front of me as a test that this is an indirect object, not a direct object).

3. Oprah - I have great respect for Oprah, who has performed many wise, positive and generous acts over the years, and I mention her grammatical mistakes only in the spirit that I hope my comments will be helpful, not hurtful. She was once a journalist and, in general, she speaks extremely well. However, she - or perhaps a young assistant who writes her cue cards - has an affection for dangling constructions, mostly participles, which have nothing to modify. On Dec. 14, Channel 5, at 4:30 p.m., she introduced a guest as follows: "After fighting for his life for an agonizing four months in and out of the hospital, doctors believed that Eric was going to lose his battle." Were the doctors fighting for his life? No. Eric was and the sentence should be rewritten as follows: "After fighting...the hospital, Eric was on the verge of losing his life." To correct a dangling participle, go to the comma that follows and make sure that the next noun or pronoun can perform the act described by the participle.

4. Oprah - The next day, Dec. 15, 2005, Oprah introduced a guest as follows: "As a young girl growing up in Texas, people often told Jenny that she looked like Julia Roberts." People are a young girl growing up in Texas? No. How do you fix this? Go to the comma and look at the first noun or pronoun that follows. Can people be a young girl growing up in Texas? Who is the young girl growing up in Texas? Jenny. Then rewrite as follows: "As a young girl growing up in Texas, Jenny was often told that she looked like Julia Roberts."

5. Here is an example from the Fruit Center in Hingham, observed last week. There was on Jan. 4, 2006, a sign attached to a pile of watermelons which read, "Personel Size Water Melons $3.99 each." What are the grammatical errors? The word "personel" does not exist in our language and watermelons is one word. I saw the errors uncorrected for several days and perhaps the erroneous sign is still there. During those several days hundreds of shoppers walked by. Many employees as well. No one did or said anything. My point is that we should strive to speak and write English correctly, we should politely try to correct an obvious mistake, and we should not become indifferent to the value of our language, which depends on grammatical accuracy, clarity of thought, and respect.

William Sprout has a B.A. from Princeton and an M.A. from Columbia, both in English with honors, and an M.A. with honors from Harvard in Romance Languages. This past fall he taught the English section of the SAT Preparation course for Lentz and Lentz. He is a Hingham resident.

Our Chinese discoverers

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see they are unveiling this week in Beijing a map that proves that a Chinese admiral called Zheng He discovered America in 1421 long before Christopher Columbus was even a gleam in his old man's eye.

A Chinese lawyer named Liu Gang came into possession of the map, which is said to show all the world, even the new one, with remarkable accuracy, in 2001 and has spent the intervening years trying to authenticate it.

"It's authentic. It supports my book to the hilt," says Gavin Menzies, the Brit author who first laid out Admiral Zheng He's claim, including the theory that his fleet reached the coast of Rhode Island.

I say, welcome to the club. What else is new?

I say, welcome to the club. What else is new?

I hate to break it like this to the Knights of Columbus but in the realm of fantasy, with occasional hard evidence, there apparently were so many strangers wandering around the Americas in 1492 that Chris was hard put the find room to land.

A good deal of them wound up in New England, too.

Some 50 years ago, a man named Frederick Pohl discovered holes in some rocks along Bass River and Follins Pond in Yarmouth and decided they were mooring holes for the Viking Leif Ericson's ships and proclaimed Cape Cod to be the long-sought Vinland.

He was so pleased with himself he wrote a whole book about it.

A hundred years ago, Harvard professor Eben Norton Horsford was so certain the Norse Vinland was up the Charles River at the place the Indians called Norumbega that he promoted a statue of Leif Ericson in Boston.

His reasoning was a trifle circuitous — the Norse were Norwegians from Norway and they called their homeland Norbega. New England Indians had a habit of dropping an "um" in the middle of words. Hences "Norumbega."

There is also the round stone tower in Newport, R. I., once identified as Governor Benedict Arnold's mill, whose possible origins as part of the Norse settlement have been romanticized in a poem by Longfellow.

Vinland, of course, has since been identified almost certainly as the northern tip of Newfoundland, a far cry from New England.

Rock carvings resembling a knight found in Westford, Mass., have been identified as evidence of a visit to New England by Henry Sinclair, the prince of Scotland and Orkney in 1398.

Columbus even has rival Italians, Nicolo and Antonio Zeno of Venice, who claim to have discovered a new land by sailing west into the Atlantic for 28 days either with or without Prince Henry Sinclair.

There was the Mali Emperor Abubakarl II, who gave up his throne and sailed away to the west in 1311, which possibly at least partially accounts for the African features on some of the ancient statues in Central America.

Fishermen from Portugal and Brittany will tell you that they have been coming to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland for hundreds of years. It's just that the fishing was so good they couldn't bring themselves to let the world in on it.

So, Admiral Zheng He, welcome. We'll set another place at the table for you.

HEALTH NOTES

Shedding light on seasonal affective disorder

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Seasonal affective disorder is also sometimes called winter depression or the hibernation reaction.

You may have seasonal affective disorder, or winter depression, a form of depression that tends to occur as the days grow shorter in the fall and winter. It is believed that affected persons react adversely to the decreasing amount of light and the colder temperature as autumn and winter progress.

The symptoms of "SAD" include regularly occurring symptoms of depression (excessive eating and sleeping, weight gain) during the fall or winter months and full remission from depression in the spring and summer months, with no nonseasonal depressive episodes. A craving for sugary and/or starchy foods has also been said to be characteristic of SAD and separate it from other depressive disorders. Other symptoms include: low mood starting in autumn or winter; lack of energy; irritability; lack of interest in socializing; increased sleep and daytime sleepiness. Women may be affected more often than men.

Seasonal affective disorder has not been recognized very long as a medical condition. The term first appeared in print in 1985. Seasonal affective disorder is also sometimes called winter depression or the hibernation reaction.

Opinion is divided as to whether SAD is a separate disease from other forms of depression, although there does appear to be a group of people that suffer with it on a regular basis starting in the autumn or winter and then recovering in the spring or summer.

It is unusual for these symptoms to be of sufficient severity for them to be brought to the attention of doctors but for those individuals who do find that they need medical help, all the usual medication and psychological treatments may be tried. There have also been reports of successful treatment using exposure to bright light as well as several studies leaving some doubt about the effectiveness of artificial light in solving the problem.

There is a small proportion of people with regular winter depression who find that their mood does not simply return to normal in the spring/summer, but that it becomes excessively high. It is possible that these individuals have another disorder and psychiatrists may propose mood stabilizing treatments for a more common non-seasonal form of the illness.

What causes winter depression?

In some people the apparent relationship to the seasons is simply because of stresses and difficulties that regularly happen for them at that time of year. It takes a serious effort to get by the holiday season without some type of mood variation. Regardless of what people call these episodes, they would seem to be little different from any depression that is triggered by a stressful event with which most of us cope.

Where a stressful event doesn't occur expert opinion varies. Some theorize that SAD is related to the reduction in natural light and the lower temperatures in the winter months but there is no good evidence that SAD is more common in very northern countries where the winter hours of daylight are much shorter.

It has been suggested that the release of a brain chemical (melatonin) may be involved. Melatonin release is influenced by exposure to light and can exert an effect on several bodily rhythms, but research has been fairly inconclusive.

SAD is known to run in families; is more common in certain countries, and investigators indicate that Doctors in Sweden say SAD affects up to 20 percent of Sweden's 8.5 million people to some degree. However, people living in some far northern countries such as Iceland seem to be less prone to the condition.

Researchers from the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) in Bethesda, Md., believe they have discovered a gene that may make people prone to SAD. NIMH Researcher Dr. Leo Sher who works with the gene believes that a version affects a person's response to light. However, Dr Sher also suspects SAD could have a purely psychological component. The symptoms of SAD could simply be a natural and desirable response to winter, he said. "In nature, animals are generally less functional in winter."

Balanced budget falls short in several areas, Griffin says

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Whoever said less is more never had to prepare a town budget.

The fiscal 2007 budget has been presented, but Town Manager Bill Griffin said he is particularly concerned about a series of line items that are very important to the town, but due to budget constraints, are not fully funded.

Prior to developing the budget, Griffin asked department heads to come up with a budget requesting every item necessary. Griffin said while he encouraged departments to ask for what they really needed, he made it clear there is a shortage of money and items would be prioritized. From those requests, Griffin cut $900,000 to ensure he could present a balanced budget.

The town's side of the budget does not have any new positions, which is part of the reason Griffin was able to keep the bottom-line figure within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 — the state law that caps the amount a municipality can increase its tax levy from year to year. However, he said the town will have to decide what to do about the volunteer coordinator position at the Cohasset Elder Affairs office, which is instrumental in keeping the department running. Currently, the position is being funded by a grant, "but the grant is running out and at this point, I can't fund the position," Griffin said.

Griffin said he would have liked to have allocated funding for a school resources officer, which would ensure a member of the police department is on hand at the schools every day. The constant police presence would allow for positive relationships to be made, but the officer could also be used for safety in the building. The lack of funding for the officer ties in with Griffin's overall feeling that the school budget he has recommended has a significant shortfall.

The building maintenance department is also significantly under-budgeted. "It is not nearly as staffed as it should be," he said, adding there is not enough help to adequately take care of the town's buildings, including the town's brand new schools. Griffin said 75 percent of the maintenance budget is school-related. The department of public works is also in need of more staffing.

Griffin said the town also has a need for engineering expertise and there is no money in the budget to hire an employee or consultant. Griffin said he had included the position in the budget, but was forced to take it out due to a lack of funds. He said the town has been very lucky to have the Greenbush liaisons working in Town Hall, as they have been able to answer many of the engineering questions that come up.

In addition, the town has a need for additional planning services and currently the budget can only accommodate paying for the town planner one day per week.

In light of the needs expressed, and due to the fact that the school department says it needs an increase of $1.6 million this year, selectman Michael Sullivan said in his opinion, "It looks to me like it's impossible to not have an override."

Town departments didn't get what they asked for in fiscal 2007 budget

Planning board	$53,372	$14,450	$38,922

School department	$13,791,366	$12,714,714	$1,076,652

Department heads to make their case for budget funding

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen plan to review the recommendations for some larger departmental budgets over the course of the next two weeks.

At the request of Town Manager Bill Griffin — rather than reviewing the details of every one of the small budgets which make up the larger town operating budget — the board will meet with department heads from the police department, fire department, department of public works, building maintenance department, library, and elder affairs.

"I feel based upon what I have recommended, these six departments deserve more conversation," Griffin said.

He said over the next two weeks, the board should meet with three department heads each night. The agenda for the Jan. 24 meeting will likely include the police, fire, and public works budgets, while the Jan. 31 meeting could include building maintenance, library, and elder affairs. Scheduling will depend on the department heads' availability.

However, Griffin has a list of 15 additional items that are also on his "wish list" but were not included in order to keep the operating budget within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2. If funding becomes available, he would like to see as many of those funded as possible, but the town would need to find an extra $482,000 to add all 15 items to the budget.

Griffin said prior to the meetings with department heads, he would like the board to review the additional 15 budget expenses which were proposed and prioritized in his budget message (See related sidebar). Griffin said the board should also consider the impact on departments if further reductions in their budgets become necessary or are imposed by Town Meeting, including options for cost savings, consolidation, and service level modifications.

Griffin said he will instruct the department heads to be prepared to describe how their departments are currently staffed, how that staffing impacts overtime expenses, and how budget reductions or additions will affect the level of service available to the public.

Selectmen asked about receiving an update from the school department, which makes up a large portion of the overall town's operating budget. Griffin said he understood the school department would be having its last budget presentation from the principals Jan. 19 and after that, there would be a joint meeting scheduled with the selectmen, school department and advisory committee. He said the meeting would likely take place at the end of January or the first week of February to give time for the governor's budget to be finalized. (The governor's budget should include local aid figures).

Griffin has suggested the town take a new approach to budgeting this year and produce balanced budgets from the start as well as supplemental budgets which can be used to add items if funding becomes available.

Selectman Rob Spofford said although the board has not been given a formal presentation on what the school department's budget would entail, it is clear from the school committee the school department's budget will seek a $1.6 million increase over last year. Griffin has factored in a 3 percent increase for the school department in his recommended budget or roughly $350,000.

The $1.6 million amount is not within the confines of Prop. 2-1/2 and therefore, would be out of balance unless the town seeks an override.

"We never voted, but as a board, we have to decide whether we support Bill's budget message and send that message up there (to the school department)," Spofford said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the school department is aware the selectmen favor seeing a balanced budget from the start. However, he said that conversation should take place at the joint meeting with the advisory committee.

For more information on meeting schedules, please contact Town Clerk Marion Douglas at (781) 383-4100 or the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Wish list items for the town's budget

If additional revenues become available beyond those projected or a Prop. 2-1/2 override is sought, Town Manager Bill Griffin recommends the following general government expenses be considered as priorities for restoration, in addition to adding funds to the school department's budget.

Department	Description	Amount
Police department	School resources officer (.5)	$40,286*
Elder affairs	Vol. coordinator (now grant funded)	$24,270

Housing consultant got us thinking

TO THE EDITOR:

The Mariner coverage of Mr. Engler's sharing of his senior housing expertise was bittersweet. It is wonderful that we have, somewhat belatedly, sought expertise that apparently was overlooked in the runup to the Cook Estate deal. It is sad that what Mr. Engler said, according to the Mariner, could have been known and had actually been suggested indirectly a number of times over the past three years. The bittersweet part is that his insights may now be discounted due to charges of conflict of interest as stated by Peter Pratt. My own view after reading Mr. Engler's saga is that he was in a conflict of interest, but that should not devalue his comments.

For example, Mr. Engler has been quoted as saying that affordable apartment units and at-market residences are odd bed fellows in his experience. He seems to believe that developers will likely stay away from apartments and he gives reasonable explanations of why. I think his position is valid.

However, on the issue of apartments I agree with former selectman McMorris that they should have been placed higher in the selection criteria as a public policy matter in providing affordable housing. On the other hand, I also agree with Engler's observation to the effect that the town tried to build too many goals into the Cook Estate Project. In some sense it was predictable that Goal A [to manage 40-B development on the town's terms] and Goal B [to provide affordable housing to Cohasset residents age 55 and above] were bound to come into conflict. If nothing else Mr. Engler's public observations should alert us to the complexity of the deal and the fact that the sequence of decision-making has been, well, odd.

Maybe an example of this conflict can be seen in the Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District [SMRD] bylaw. I voted against this bylaw. One of the reasons was that as I read the zoning bylaw for the SMRD, Section 16.10.6 contains this prohibition: "A SMRD shall constitute housing for persons of age fifty-five or over within the meaning of MGL...and in accordance therewith one hundred percent (100%) of the dwelling units in a SMRD shall be owned and occupied by at least one person fifty-five..."

If that is an accurate reading of the bylaw and that it is a reasonable assumption that "apartments" can't be owned, then the SMRD bylaw prohibits apartments from a SMRD. Yet the Cook Estate is a SMRD. Therefore, the RFP could not include apartments and if apartments were recommended by a bidder it would not fit the parameters of the bylaw.

If that is true, then Mr. Engler could also have argued against mixing apartments and condos on the basis that the bylaw under which the Cook Estate is being built actually prohibits them. Mr. Engler deserves thanks from Cohasset Taxpayers for getting us to think hard about this project and to question assumptions. Four to five million dollars is a lot of money no matter how we cut it. And, if as some have suggested, the town could buy the property and then seek a developer, we'd have a lot more at risk than we do now.

Chamber tackles housing cost issue

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce is hosting a luncheon from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., Monday (Jan. 23) at the Radisson in Hotel Rockland.

The topic is "What's behind the high cost of housing?"

Why are houses so expensive in eastern Massachusetts? Researchers from the Pioneer Institute and Harvard's Rappaport Institute examined the regulations in 187 communities east of Worcester. Their provocative new study "Regulation and the Rise of Housing Prices in Greater Boston" points to the patchwork of local land-use regulations governing zoning, wetlands, septic, and subdivisions.

"The greater Boston area's housing shortage is not the result of a shortage of land, but rather of restrictions on the existing land that make denser development difficult to impossible. While low densities have their virtues, they also ensure that housing will stay expensive and retard economic growth," the study states.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce, one of the sponsors of the study, has invited the study's authors to discuss their findings with local officials and South Shore business leaders.

Teachers hold another 'informational' picket

Members of the Cohasset Teachers' Association gathered at 7:15 a.m. yesterday (Thursday) at the corner of Rte. 3A and Sohier Street to hold another informational picket. The demonstration was intended to increase awareness of what teachers have said is an "ongoing crisis."

Cohasset teachers began this school year without a contract and are still working without one. A press release issued by the CTA states that after "yet another bargaining session last night (Tuesday, Jan. 17) with a mediator, teachers and the school committee remain apart on key issues that will impact the schools' ability to attract and retain highly qualified teachers."

The release quotes Ed Leonard, high school guidance counselor and teachers bargaining team chairperson. "It's been over a year and we're losing patience," he stated, adding "Fundamentally, this contract is about our schools' willingness to pay teachers commensurate with surrounding towns like Hingham, Norwell, Scituate, Duxbury, and Hanover.

"We've been extremely flexible in our negotiations. While we've made some progress, we're not there yet. The bottom line remains: how will Cohasset schools attract and retain the best and brightest if they fail to pay teachers fairly?"

Cohasset teachers have been gradually escalating their protests in an effort to settle the contract. The beginning of the year saw teachers attending school committee meetings en masse, all wearing red buttons to show their solidarity. Statements were read stating their desire to move forward with negotiations.

Into the year, teachers began holding informational pickets or walking out together at the end of the school day. A work-to-rule was instated, meaning teachers would only perform the duties outlined in their contracts, and nothing more, such as chaperoning dances or coordinating overnight trips. Teachers also held an informational picket at the corner of Rte. 3A and Pond Street in December.

Another close call for gymnasts

By Rachel Thomas
CORRESPONDENT

Another meet, another narrow loss.

The Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team took part in a meet at home this past Saturday against Hanover. Although it was originally scheduled to be a tri-meet, Bridgewater Raynham was unable to attend; therefore, the meet only included Coh-Noh and Hanover, with the local team dropping a 124.6-124.1 decision.

The meet was quite close between the two teams throughout the entire competition, as many members of both teams had scores in the 7's and 8's. One of Coh-Noh's strongest events was bars, as captains Kate Carpenter and Erin Kelly received scores of 8.0 and 8.1, respectively. Both Lisa Spirito of Cohasset, also a captain, and Melissa Murphy of Norwell followed close behind, earning scores of 7.9.

"One particular girl who had a very great meet was captain CJ Himberg," said coach Amy Maree. "She obtained an 8.0 on beam, a 7.6 on floor and a 7.5 on bars, all of which were very important scores to the team."

In addition to Himberg, all of the seniors again were strong assets to the team. Both Kelly and Spirito, captains of the team and the all-around competitors, had high scoring meets. Kelly, who scored an 8.65 on floor, obtained a 31.75 for her all around score, and Spirito, a senior from Cohasset, scored a 31.05 all around.

Murphy competed on three events, scoring a 7.4 on vault, a 7.45 on floor, and a 7.9 on bars, scores which were significant contributions.

"Melissa Murphy also had a very good meet as she was very strong on the three events she competed on," Maree said.

Norwell freshman Cassie Pacella competed on floor, as she surpassed her previous score of a 7.2 with a 7.5.

The Hanover team's strongest event proved to be floor, where one of the gymnasts scored an impressive 9.2, while another competitor scored an 8.7.

"We knew it was going to be a close meet because Hanover had been scoring about the same as us in their previous meets," Maree said of the competition.

Although the meet did not go in Coh-Noh's favor, the team was quite happy with how each gymnast did.

"The meet was so close and everyone tried her hardest, so we are all proud of how we competed," Murphy said.

The meet against Bridgewater-Raynham was rescheduled to be included in the meet this past Tuesday against Plymouth South. B-R will be tough competition for Cohasset-Norwell, as the team has been scoring between 130 and 140 throughout the season.

Coach encouraged by recent efforts against Norwell, Abington-EB

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Judging by how coaches Ben Virga and Paul Hurley were talking after Wednesday night's Norwell-Cohasset hockey showdown, you'd have thought the score was the other way around.

Norwell was victorious, 3-0, but it was Cohasset's Virga who was raving about his team's effort, while Hurley was clearly frustrated.

The Skippers out-shot Norwell 33-18 for the game, 17-7 in the third period alone, and that's not the only category in which the Skippers' third-year coach feels his team had the advantage.

"[Norwell] has a very talented team, but I felt that for 45 minutes, we carried the play," Virga said. "I thought we out-hit them, out-skated them and out-hustled them."

The game started out as a primarily defensive battle for the first seven minutes. The top blue-liners on each side - Conor Holway and Charlie Czerkawski for Cohasset, Andrew McClendon and Brendan Gilligan for Norwell - made it tough for their opponents to get quality shots on the net. Czerkawski had a big-time hit two minutes into the game, one of many on the night for the Skippers sophomore.

Virga also praised the defensive play of junior Corbin Faber, who started the season as a forward.

"Corbin played an unbelievable game of defense tonight," Virga said. "He's been playing defense for two weeks, and he already knows the system better than everyone."

It was McClendon, though, who came up with the play of the night to set up Norwell's first goal. With 1:40 to go in the first period, Cohasset freshman Andrew Smith broke into the offensive zone on a 2-on-1. McClendon cut to his right, skated Smith off the puck, controlled it himself and passed it up the ice to teammate Cody Cavicchi.

Now it was Cavicchi and fellow sophomore Cory Himberg moving in on their own 2-on-1. The Clippers duo made it count, as Cavicchi hit Himberg with a pass and Himberg put it in for a 1-0 lead with 1:33 left in the period. Cohasset's Mark Bouchard had a good chance to score on a wrister just 13 seconds later, but Norwell junior goalie John Collins (33 saves) made the stop.

The second period started the same as the first, with the defense in control of the game. Norwell sophomore center Dan Dempsey joined the hit parade with a couple major shots of his own. At the 7:21 mark, Dempsey was on the other end of a big hit, but not before he got off a perfect pass to freshman James McAteer in front of the net.

McAteer backhanded it past Cohasset netminder Jonny Wade (15 saves) for a 2-0 Norwell lead. Sophomore Zach Smith also picked up an assist on the goal.

From there, it was all Cohasset in every phase of the game except for the one that matters most: the scoreboard. Holway and junior center Austin Lanzillotti had great back-to-back chances with five minutes to go in the second, but Collins was up to the task on both.

It was the play of Collins and McClendon that made the difference for Norwell, who picked up its third goal with 4:23 left in the game when freshman Garrett Duffy found Dempsey with a nice cross-ice pass on a two-on-one for the goal.

Collins made six more saves after that for the shutout, including two on monster shots by Cohasset senior Brandon Smith from the point.

Virga again complimented the play of his "black line," T.J. Kennedy, Alex Goetz and Chris Davis. The coach says his team as a whole has improved vastly since the beginning of the year.

"A month ago, we were hoping we didn't lose [to Norwell] by 10 goals," Virga said. "That's how far we've come."

Three finish first at Cohasset Tournament

Dorian, McKenna, McClellan take top spot in their respective weight classes

By Ben Libby

Several Cohasset wrestlers left the Cohasset High Gym on Saturday night with smiles on their faces.

Senior co-captains Shane Dorian and Dave McKenna finished first in their respective weight classes. Joining Dorian and McKenna on the winners stand was junior Ryan McClellan. Although Cohasset didn't win its own tournament as a team, they were in the hunt all along and finished fifth out of 10 squads.

The story of the day, however, was the impressive performance of Dorian, who was voted Outstanding Wrestler by the coaches. In all three of his matches, he pinned his opponents for the victory. In the finals, Dorian pinned Josh Sardy of Lynnfield.

Going into the tournament, Dorian was seen as the favorite in the 145 weight class, and he responded with dominating triumphs.

"Today I had the confidence and I knew no one could stop me from getting the championship," Dorian said after his title bout. "Especially since it's my last Cohasset tournament, I wanted to go out in a good way."

Jaffe named most innovative youth lax coach

Cohasset's Chuck Jaffe has been named the country's most innovative youth lacrosse coach by U.S. Lacrosse, the sport's national governing body.

The founder and director of Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, Jaffe traveled to Philadelphia last Saturday to receive a plaque and also a certificate of recognition for his 10 years of involvement in youth lacrosse. The town's youth program started in 1996; Jaffe coached boys for six years and is entering his fifth season of running the girls program.

Among the concepts Jaffe says he has brought into his practices are "tackle lacrosse" (which is exactly what the name implies) and the philosophy of "dominant moments," in which making a big play is more highly emphasized than being a dominant overall player.

"If you scoop the ball up in traffic and pass it to the right person in the right place, and do it without panicking," Jaffe explained, "then for those five seconds, everyone else on the field is waiting on you. You are totally in control of the game."

Cohasset lacrosse parents Lynn Previte and Paula Buick, who have both had multiple children play for Jaffe in the youth system, nominated him for the award. Jaffe also thanked coaches Bob Inman and Jen Palmer, both coaches in the youth lacrosse program.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has 250 players in grades 3-8 for the upcoming season, split into 14 teams (eight boys teams, six for girls).

Lady hoopsters hoping to bounce back

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

Let's face it, last week was not the best week for John Levangie and his Lady Skippers.

On a balmy Tuesday evening - Jan. 10 to be exact - the squad headed south into Carver country to square off against last year's South Shore League champions. The temperature soared past 50 degrees, but the Skipper shooting hit the freezing mark.

From the get-go, the Crusaders spelled trouble for Cohasset. Just minutes into the game, senior captain Chelsea Grossman injured her knee, sidelining her for the rest of the game. Without Grossman's spark on both ends of the floor, the Skippers struggled both offensively and defensively.

The first half seemed more like "The Carver Show" than a fairly-matched contest.

"We weren't playing like ourselves," explained junior Lacey Richardson. "We were asleep defensively and our offense was nonexistent."

The Skippers emerged from hibernation in the second half. Freshman Gabriella Flibbotte ran the floor with confidence. Captain Mia Lieb-Lappen ran up eight points in the final minutes. Despite these impressive personal efforts, the Crusaders put the game way out of reach, ultimately winning by a 45-24 score.

Part two of the disappointing week occurred three days later. A long bus trip down to Harwich didn't change the downward direction of the team. On a positive note, the Skippers played solid defense during for much of the first half. Unfortunately, soon after the buzzer sounded for the start of the second half, the Rough Riders trampled on the Skipper defense.

"We always find it tough to defend Harwich," admits Levangie. "They are very consistent and their outside shooting is outstanding."

The Skippers fell by a respectable 49-37 score.

No reason exists to lose hope however. Both Carver and Harwich represent some of the toughest competition Cohasset will face this season. The girls should perform better as they gain more experience.

Just take Levangie's word for it.

"These losses did not discourage us," he said. "Because we are a young team, we expect to be unpredictable. We keep improving. I am confident we will bounce back."

Hopefully the Lady Skippers can get back into the groove just as quickly as the fell out of it, as they got off to a good start in that direction with Tuesday night's win over Hull. Tonight's game at Norwell, who are in second place in the league after knocking off Harwich earlier this week, will be a true test.

She would do whatever she could to help the team. She always remained positive, gave 110 percent, and really helped this team along."

Kelly Downs -
Senior (Capt.)
Stopper - Hanover

As the equivalent of an infield utility player, Downs made her presence felt all over the field…Working primarily as a midfield/stopper, Downs was an essential part of a defense that shut out 11 opponents in 17 regular season games…A strong and skilled player, Downs came up huge in a rematch with Patriot League rival East Bridgewater, marking the league's best attacker and denying her the opportunity to score in a 0-0 tie…Downs' play across the field helped the Lady Indians to a 13-3-1 overall record, while going 12-1-1 in the Patriot League, the loss and tie coming against EB…A Patriot League All-star, Downs is a two-year starter on the field hockey team…Also a standout catcher on the HHS softball squad, Downs will captain that team this spring…She was an All-Scholastic in that sport last spring.

Angela Stearns -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Hanover

One of the best midfielders in the Patriot League over the last three seasons, Stearns is a two-time PL All-star for the runners-up (12-1-1, 13-3-1 overall)…Opposing offenses found it hard to get by this talented center midfielder, who made key contributions both offensively and defensively…Stearns' speed and stick skills made her most effective in breaking up plays before they began…She was also a key member of the Hanover offense, assisting on 19 goals, while scoring two herself…Stearns was the go-to person on corner penalties because of her ability to convert her hard, flat hits…Stearns was a member of the Massachusetts Best of 60 Senior team this past fall…She is making her second appearance on the All-Scholastic field hockey team…Stearns also made our softball squad after turning in a solid junior campaign with the PL champion Lady Indians last spring…She will captain that team in April.

Kate LaRose - Junior
Goalie - Hanover

In her first starting season, this talented keeper was one of the best in the Patriot League this season, finishing with a 0.76 goals against average, second to only fellow All-Scholastic Caitryn McCullam…LaRose allowed just 13 goals and shut out 12 opponents in 17 regular season games…Helped get Hanover off to a stellar 9-0 start in giving up just two goals in those contests…Came up huge in a trio of big games against rivals East Bridgwater and Hingham, shutting out the Harborwomen (2-0) and denying several chances in a 2-1 win…In a rematch with EB, LaRose was stellar in shutting out the Patriot League's leading scorer en route to a 0-0 tie…Her performance in the cage helped the Lady Indians nail down a 12-1-1 record, good for second behind only EB…Met up with the Lady Vikings again in the Div. 2 South tourney and turned in a great effort in a tough 3-2 OT loss…Just a junior, LaRose will return to the field hockey squad next season.

Caitryn McCullam -
Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Hingham

Was the anchor of a Hingham squad that enjoyed one of its best seasons in recent years…McCallum recorded nine shutouts in 18 regular season games and did not allow more than two goals in a single game all season…She only did that three times…In all, McCullam allowed just 12 goals in 18 games for a Patriot League-leading 0.67 goals against average…The confident keeper denied some of the better opponents in the PL, shutting out Duxbury and allowing just one goal in a 1-0 loss to champs East Bridgewater, a team loaded with offensive power…Also shut out highly regarded Div. 1 Bridgewater-Raynham (1-0)…Her solid play in the cage led the Harborwomen to an 11-4-3 record (9-3-2 PL, third place)…In the Div. 1 South tourney, the PL All-star was sensational, denying New Bedford in regulation and in OT in Hingham's 1-0 first round win…Turned in a very respectable performance against Div. 1 power Walpole with a 26-save effort in a quarterfinal loss to the eventual Sectional champs…McCullam also runs track indoors and plays lacrosse…She is vice-president of her Senior Class and plans to attend college next fall. Hingham coach Meredith Gordon: "Caitryn is a veteran of the tournament. She is a seasoned goalie and we will miss her next year."

Tori Popp - Senior
Midfielder - Hingham

This Patriot League All-star is a two-year starter on the Harborwomen squad and was an essential part of the team's speedy offense…Popp was a key fixture in the midfield, her speed and stick skills making her one of the squad's best setup players…Not one of those players who racks up the stats, Popp's impact in the midfield went far beyond points…Playing in the middle, there weren't many balls Popp didn't get a stick on, consistently creating opportunity for the Hingham squad…She was also an essential part of the defensive midfield, contributing to a Harborwomen defense that shut out nine opponents in 18 regular season games and allowed just 12 goals…Her impact on the field helped Hingham to an 11-4-3 record, while going 9-3-2 in the Patriot League to finish third…Played very strong in the team's 2-2 tie with PL champs, EB, putting what was the first blemish on the Lady Vikings' record…Popp also played well in a 1-0 OT win over New Bedford in the Div. 1 South tourney before leaving the field prematurely in a quarterfinal loss to Walpole due to injury…Popp plans to attend college in the fall.

Taylor Gorman -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Marshfield

Was the key set-up person on offense for the Lady Rams…Gorman's speed, skills, and scoring ability earned her the Most Valuable Player award from her team…The senior captain racked up 17 points on seven goals, 10 assists…Had two of her best games against non-league foe Plymouth North, netting one goal in a 1-0 win and both in a 2-1 victory…The Old Colony League All-star was one of the few returning starters on a squad that graduated 15 seniors from the previous fall and was an excellent leader, according to her coach…Gorman was mainly the team's center midfielder, but also dropped back to center back when the Lady Rams (6-11-1) needed to protect a lead…Is also a standout lacrosse player at MHS and the three-year starter will captain the squad this spring…Gorman plans to continue her field hockey career in college next fall. Marshfield coach Carol Anderson: "She is the backbone of the team. Everything goes through her. She sets up her teammates well."

Margot Littlehale -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Norwell

Arguably the Clippers' best two-way player, helping lead the program to its first state tournament berth in nearly a decade…South Shore League All-Star made plays all over the field…Defensively, almost always in the right position to stop an opponent's attack…Took most of the restarts in the attacking half of the field…Says the Oct. 24 game in Hull, where Norwell clinched a spot in the postseason, was her and the team's best of the season…Scored two goals in 6-0 win over Chatham on Sept. 12…Assisted on key insurance goal during Sept. 30 4-2 win in Marshfield…A captain on the defending Division 2 state champion lacrosse team; currently playing in an indoor lacrosse league to prepare for the spring season…Hopes to continue her lacrosse career at Connecticut College, her first choice for college, and plans to major in political science and minor in Spanish…A member of the Young Republicans club and Diversity Club at NHS…Norwell coach Jen Schad: "Margot was probably our strongest leader on the team, and our most versatile player. She just loves the game."

Erin McCarthy - Senior
Midfielder - Norwell

One of Norwell's top defenders from her midfield position, McCarthy was one of three South Shore League All-Stars on the Norwell roster this season...Showed great improvement over the course of the season, to the point where she was one of the Clippers' most valuable players by year's end…Contributed a lot to a defense that allowed more than two goals only four times during the whole season…A good athlete with never-ending stamina…A former trackster at NHS…Peer Educator is also a member of the Diversity Club and Yearbook Club…Norwell coach Jen Schad: "Erin really came a long way for us this year. By the end of the year, I thought she was consistently one of the best players on the field."

Chelsea Bracchi
Senior (Capt.)
Goalkeeper - Pembroke

Next season the Titans will miss this solid rock between the posts as well as her leadership qualities. The Titans' season was an up and down affair for the young squad, but Bracchi was a definite bright spot for Pembroke all season long. The senior goalkeeper was voted the team MVP this season as well as winning the coach's award at the Fall banquet. She stopped 166 shots this year including a pair of shutouts a tie with Scituate and a win over Divsion 1 Taunton. She also had a monster game in a losing effort to Hanover. She earned league all-star recognition for her efforts this season. She is a captain in three sports, including the basketball and softball teams, and was a Patriot league all-star in softball last spring as a junior captain in the outfield.

Melissa McGinley -
Senior (Capt.) -
Forward - Scituate

The most consistent offensive threat for a Sciutate team that doubled its win total from last year…One of two Patriot League first-team All-Stars this season…A solid stick handler that started many attacks with her runs upfield…Took many of Scituate's restarts in the offensive end…Her penalty corner led to Scituate's goal in a 1-1 tie with heavily favored Duxbury on Oct. 13…Has only played the game since her sophomore year…Also a captain for the SHS softball team, where she plays second base…Will go to college in Florida, either at Nova Southeastern University or Florida Southern…Plans to play field hockey and softball in college, and major in biology…Aspires to a career in the medical field…Has recently taken up kickboxing…Consistently praised by SHS coach Heather True for her leadership on what was a young Sailors team this year

Michelle Pecinovsky
Junior - (Capt.)'
Center Midfield - Silver Lake

The Silver Lake field hockey team was fortunate to have this stalwart on the field at all times this season. Early in the year head coach Marlene Lopes moved Pecinovsky into the center midfield spot in order to have everything go through her and she rewarded her coach with solid play in the middle. She scored four goals this season for a team that had a hard time generating offense, and she was often a prime target of opposing defenses. She was a captain of the team as a junior, and will perform the same task next season in her fourth final year as a member of the varsity. She is a member of the girls basketball team in the winter and the golf team at Silver Lake.

Coach Lopes on her star player, "She's a tremendous leader and one of our hardest workers."

Tournament was Mckenna. Mckenna won his first match by major decision (11-2) and his second match by tech-fall (15-0). In the finals, Mckenna beat Joe Bois in easy fashion (10-4) to win the 171 weight class.

Junior Ryan McClellan had himself a nice day, winning his first match by pin and his second match by decision (10-5). Then in the finals, McClellan stormed his opponent and pinned him to win the 112-pound weight class.

Also having a fine tourney for Cohasset was Jake Watts (103) and Adam Smith (135), both finished third in their respective weight classes. Nick Cambi finished his day with a record of 2-2, landing him in the fourth place slot.

The Cohasset wrestling team traveled to Carver Wednesday night, and tomorrow afternoon (2 p.m. start) compete in a challenging quad with Wayland, Whitman-Hanson and Durfee.

a contender for the South Shore League title, Bouchard scored the game-winning goal with 1:30 left to give the Skippers a huge win at Rockland Rink.

After a scoreless first period, Cohasset sophomore Patrick Doonan put his team in front early in the second. Coming out of the penalty box, Doonan took the puck toward the AEB net and went top shelf for the goal. The home team tied it soon thereafter, and it was 1-1 at the second intermission.

In the opening minutes of the third, Andrew Smith put in the rebound of his own shot for a 2-1 Skippers advantage. That lead held until there were two minutes left in the game, when AEB tied it up, setting the stage for Bouchard's dramatic score.

Virga said Doonan and the Smith brothers came up huge in this game, as did Wade in net.

After the loss to Norwell, Cohasset's record stood at 3-5-2 at the halfway point of the season, 2-2-2 in the league. Virga admitted Wednesday night that catching first-place Norwell in the league may be wishful thinking at this point, but said second place "is wide open." Mashpee, Harwich-Provincetown and AEB are all in contention for that second spot with Cohasset, who is 1-1-1 against those teams so far this season.

As for the Skippers' ultimate goal of qualifying for the state tournament, Virga says his team virtually has to win its next two games: Saturday night in Pembroke (6:50 face-off at Hobomock), and Wednesday night (5:40 scheduled start) in Bridgewater against Carver-Sacred Heart. Cohasset will be looking to avenge a 3-3 tie against the Crusaders at Pilgrim on Dec. 28.

CHS boys come up short against Harwich

By Fletcher Smalzel
CORRESPONDENT

In the middle of a stretch riddled with South Shore League games, the Cohasset High boys basketball team played host to the Harwich Rough Riders last Friday night.

Coming into the night, the Skippers had already played three straight games against opponents in the South Shore League, and Harwich would make it four. Since league games are so vital to a team's success in the regular season, Cohasset head coach Dorian Bryant and his team knew they would be in for a fight against Harwich.

"Harwich is a scrappy team, pretty well coached, and they have a really good player in Ryan Soares," said Bryant after his team's 52-46 loss. "We knew that they were going to come in here and give us a good challenge. We just came up a little short tonight. But the kids played great."

The Harwich boys came out of the gate very aggressively, pressing Cohasset's guards, senior Trevor Brady and sophomore Pat McCarthy. Junior forward Jeff Brown proved to be a reliable outlet to break the Rough Riders' presses.

Brown's skillful ball-handling resulted in numerous drives to the hoop. Although Brown and his teammates had some trouble making lay-ups in traffic, their consistent efforts to get to the hoop resulted in several trips to the free throw line.

By the end of the first half the "rough" Riders sent Cohasset to the line 10 times, while the Skippers finished the half with just four fouls. The abundance of fouls by Harwich did not hurt them, however, as they went into the half ahead, 25-15.

Brown and Soares proved to be the stars for each team, going into the halftime break with nine and 11 points, respectively. Despite Soares' short stature, he was able to drive through the paint on multiple occasions to help Harwich jump ahead.

Cohasset may have been down at halftime, but they were certainly not out. The Skippers were able to come out of the locker room motivated and ready to play, thanks to some words of criticism by Bryant.

"I said that we need to get more focused…we could give a little bit more effort," said the coach.

As the two teams took the floor for the second half, Cohasset was able to close the gap on the Rough Riders, and with eight-and-a-half minutes to go in the game the Skippers had taken their first lead, 31-30.

A huge contributor to the resilience of the Skippers was John McCarthy. Even though he finished the first half with no points, McCarthy came out firing in the second, finishing the game with 10 points. Brown continued to contribute in the second half as well, matching his first half total of nine to give him 18 points for the game.

Despite their slow start to the second half, Soares and his Rough Riders were able to regain the lead. With one minute left in the game, Harwich was comfortably ahead, 47-41. Soares' game-high 20 points propelled Harwich to a 52-46 victory over Cohasset.

Hull 47, Cohasset 39

By Eric MacCarthy

Monday night the Skippers traveled to Hull to tip off against the Pirates. Coming in with only two wins, and one being outside of the league, Cohasset was looking to win this big game.

Right from the beginning, things were not looking up for Cohasset. After only the first six minutes of play, Cohasset already trailed Hull 15-3 with only a mere three-point shot made by starting small forward Jeff Brown. It appeared that the Pirates strong attack and pushing of the ball was too much for Cohasset to handle.

The explosive offense of Hull was led by senior point guard Henry O'Loughlin, who finished the game with 24 points. O'Loughlin seemed unstoppable, draining almost every single shot he took and outrunning everyone else on the court.

The inability of Cohasset's defense to keep up with the fast-paced game of O'Loughlin and the rest of the Pirates led to a horrible sight of the scoreboard for the Cohasset fans that made the trip. As the buzzer went off to signal the end of the first half, the Skippers were looking down as the scoreboard read 32-10, Hull. O'Loughlin had 19 points which contributed for more than half of Hull's points. Brown had half of Cohasset's points with five.

Coming out of the locker room, the Skippers knew that they had to play much better than they did in the first half, and it seemed to show. In the first seven minutes of the second half, Cohasset had already doubled their score, but now trailed Hull 43-20.

About a minute later Hull finally took O'Loughlin out of the game, giving the Skippers a chance to make the score more respectable. Cohasset's defense was stepping it up and in the next five minutes only allowed a single point, and trailed only by 13.

O'Loughlin re-entered the game, but this didn't faze the Skippers, as they continued to cut the lead down and play the tough defense they had been lacking in the first half. Senior co-captain Trevor Brady nailed a three-pointer as the buzzer sounded to account for the final score of 47-39, Hull.

Even though it was another loss for Cohasset, they showed that if their hearts are truly into the game they can play pretty well. In the second half, Cohasset outscored the Pirates 29-15, which was probably partially caused by another halftime speech from Coach Bryant. Unfortunately, that first half hole was too much to overcome.

The boys face another tough challenge tonight when Norwell comes to town for a 6:30 tipoff. Cohasset hosts Mashpee on Tuesday night.

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

TIPS ON HOW TO MAKE THE FINAL CHOICE IN YOUR CAMP SEARCH

BY BETTE BUSSEL, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, AMERICAN CAMP ASSOCIATION, NEW ENGLAND

• Use your knowledge about the prospective camper when making the final decision. That's why advisors and experts, like those on staff at ACA England, cannot choose a camp for you. Consider the camp in terms of the child or teen's current needs and interests.

• Revisit the initial conversations you had with your child or teen. Are the expectations you both had from the start still realistic? The elements that you both felt were essential to find in a camp (dealbreakers) may now have changed since you've found out what's really offered.

• Compare and balance the family's expectations based on knowledge about the prospective camper WITH the list of what your actual camp research has turned up. If the lists don't match at all, start over and find other options by contacting a camp advisor or consultant. It's at the intersection of these lists that

• Explore the potential fit of your finalists. Nothing can replace visiting a camp when children are present; so if at all possible, go see your finalist camps the summer before you plan to send your child. That way you can imagine what it will be like. Recognize that it will be slightly different next summer. Weather may be different, counselors and activities may change, and new children will be part of the group. Still, you'll get a sense

• Try to meet some of the camp personnel in person or over the phone. Attend camp informational sessions and Open Houses, go to camp fairs and meet the camp's administrators, and take the opportunity to talk with them on the telephone. Look at pictures of the camp on the Web site, on DVD or video and in print materials.

• Get a peek at the camp through the eyes of other parents. Ask for references and check them. Hear about what other families did and didn't like about the camp you are considering; let your prospective camper do part of the interviewing too. Ask good questions and listen carefully to the answers.

• Trust your gut instincts if you're stuck between two or three finalists. As the expert on your child, you have an intuitive feel for what's going to work. There is a part of the final camp search process that defies charts and checklists--the part that is chemistry between people. Inevitably, something will make you more comfortable with one camp option or another-- the professionals, the philosophy, the program and activities or the unique combination of all of these.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Some seniors bid adieu to English

LIFE AT CHS

CHRIS PESCATORE

The high school is extremely mundane following the long weekend and it seems as though there is almost nothing going on this week. Exciting news is not something that is abundant in this edition; however, I'll do my best to spice up the few events that are taking place. The term is coming to an end next Friday and report cards will be issued on Feb. 3. For those lucky seniors who began the year with English, this week will be their last full one (except for AP they meet all four quarters) of English for the rest of their high school careers, congratulations. Martin Luther King Day was observed on Monday, and there was a breakfast sponsored by the Diversity Committee to recognize the accomplishments of Dr. King. Zachary Etkind, an astute young adult here at the High School participated with others at the event. Here we go again, the news in the Cohasset High School for this week.

• The Debate Team will have met on Tuesday, the 17th to review their objectives and strategies for their big meet on Wednesday against Bishop Feehan. Good luck students, make a point.

• The Drama club will have met on Tuesday and Thursday in the auditorium to rehearse for their upcoming event.

• The PSO President's Council will have met on Tuesday.

• The Varsity Swim Team will have had a competition Wednesday at Randolph High School. Best of luck swimmers, do as the fish do.

• The Varsity Ice Hockey Team will have had a huge game at Norwell on Wednesday. They need support so if you missed this one; make it a point to go to their next home game in Hingham.

• Congratulations to the following students who were published in the January issue of Teen Ink: Ryan Ingram, Toby Norman, Chelsea Richardson, and Nicole Whitney.

• Wrestlers have a quad meet on Saturday at Wayland, vs. Whitman-Hanson, Durfee.

• The High School Band and Chorus will have had their annual Cabaret at 7 p.m. at Atlantica on Thursday, the 19th.

• Juniors will be receiving their college binders soon, which will help guide them through the arduous college process next year. Have fun with it juniors.

• The Faculty Senate suggested to the administration that they reinstate backpacks in classrooms, returning the school back to some form of normality.

• SAT's will take place on Saturday, Jan. 28, which is the same day as the Junior-Senior Semi-Formal Dance.

• A committee has been formed for the selection of the members of National Honor Society; the committee is comprised of are the Department Chairpersons. This means that new students are now able to be admitted to the venerable society, and those who qualify were notified this past week.

There you have it, a committee was formed for the National Honor Society, which is big news for those juniors striving for excellence, but too little too late for some seniors hoping to join the club before the second term of their senior year. That's really all there is this week, it's a bit sad I know, but what can you do after a long weekend except enjoy the four day week, so try to stay warm in this frigid weather pattern.. So long.

Helping the hungry in South America

By Graham Blackburn, Cali Guiggio. Lauren McManus, Owen Burchill
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Mrs. Wells's class collected the cans in the recycling bin at the Joseph Osgood School. We recycled them for five cents each. We bought a chicken with the money. Chickens lay eggs to feed hungry people in South America.

Since a chicken can lay 200 eggs a year, it can feed a family for a year. When a chicken gets old, families can eat the chicken. We hope by the end of the year we can collect more bottles to earn enough money to buy another animal.

This article was submitted by a second grade class at the Joseph Osgood Elementary School that is studying the continents. The students completed learning about South America and contributed to Heifer International. This organization sends animals to Third World countries to build sustainable income and food for needy people.

PAC by-law panel meeting

The Parent Advisory Council for Special Needs By-Law Panel will meet Thursday, Jan. 26, at 7 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Library. Anyone interested in joining is welcome to attend. The goal of this meeting is to review the current by-laws and update them so that the updated draft can be shared with members in the school district for additional input and approval.

For more information, e-mail: southshorepac@comcast.net.

Integrated Preschool applications available

The Integrated Preschool of Cohasset Public Schools is accepting applications for typically developing children. Children who are 3-years-old prior to Sept. 1, 2006 are appropriate for the morning class. Children who will be 4-years-old prior to Sept. 1, 2006 will be considered for the afternoon class.

Applications, which are available in the Student Services Office at 143 Pond St. and at Osgood Elementary School, must be returned by Feb. 17: Student services Office, 143 Pond Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The cost per student is $1,600 per year and will be paid on a quarterly basis. Fees may be reduced upon completing and submitting a parent income statement. The lottery process is Monday, Feb. 27; parents will be notified by mail.

Watershed Academy to start

The Center for Student Coastal Research in collaboration with the town of Cohasset, Coastal Zone Management and Cohasset Middle-High School Summer Institute program, announces the establishment of the Watershed Academy. This initiative builds upon CSCR's expectation that academy students can learn how to produce research findings that meet the rigors of professional, peer review standards. The academy is a series of instructional classes that will provide students with the knowledge and training needed to properly assist their communities in carrying out coastal research projects.

Students will learn how to do environmental science, and how to actively protect, preserve, and promote stewardship of our coastal resources. For ambitious, curious, and concerned young people interested in learning the basics of coastal watershed problems and research, the academy will provide a comprehensive set of skills directly applicable to research projects currently underway in Cohasset, Scituate, Hull, Hingham, Marshfield, Hanover, and Norwell. For experienced students who have participated in past environmental research projects, the academy will both strengthen and broaden the knowledge and skills they have previously acquired.

Tentative dates and times are Wednesdays, from 7:15 to 9 p.m., at CSCR, 40 Parker Ave, Cohasset, for 10 weeks, beginning March 1. There is no tuition for the academy. The academy is supported by Coastal Zone Management grants to CSCR and the town of Cohasset. Enrollment is open to all, with preference given to area high school students. For information call Jack Buckley, 781-383-0129 or email jbuckley.cscr@verizon.net.

Students will learn how to do environmental science, and how to actively protect, preserve, and promote stewardship of our coastal resources.

The Watershed Academy will address the following general topics and objectives:

How to set up and organize a major environmental study plan. How professionals approach a problem such as non-point source pollution and how they conceive, organize, and develop a plan of study.

GIS and ArcView watershed analysis tools. How to use the computer mapping software ArcView and geographical information systems technology to create, analyze, visualize, or present environmental data.

How to conduct Field Inspection Efforts. What needs to be examined in a watershed study area, how to find it, what to observe, and how to record it.

Water quality sampling and analysis plans. What to test for, how to test for it, how to understand it; how to record it, and how to analyze it. Use of mathematical statistical analysis tools.

Hydrologic Analysis and Pollutant Load Allocation. How to figure out how much water moves through an area such as rainfall washing down roads, into the ground, or into catch basins. How to calculate the amount of freshwater flowing into the harbor, or how to calculate how much saltwater is flowing into a marsh. How to calculate the amount, or load of pollution entering the system.

BMP assessment and optimization. What a Best Management Practice is, what it looks like, and how it might fit into the needs of a problem area.

Summary reporting. What is needed by a town or organization for its final report. How to put together a report that will "meet the rigors of professional scientific review."

Prospective students will be interested in knowing that CSCR is working closely with area schools to provide eligibility for course credit. Cohasset High School students will be advised by science department chair Dave Magnussen regarding course credit. Additionally, highly motivated students who complete the program may be eligible for a paid position in the Summer Institute program, subject to additional grant funding. Students should understand that the Academy program is the type of extra curricular study that could possibly open doors to future unforeseen opportunities.

Juniors organize PASSBACK project

"Passback" is something that you might think gets yelled during a basketball game or a soccer match. But in Mr. Buckley's Community Service/Civics class at Cohasset High School, it has a completely different meaning. To three Cohasset juniors, Haley Haracz, Taylor Bukowski and Sarah Beth Butman, it means giving a group of kids in a completely different country a chance to play a sport they love with some slightly used equipment.

Sarah Beth Butman, Taylor Bukowski and Haley Haracz standing behind some of the equipment collected for the PASSBACK project.

Early in the fall semester, Haley, Taylor and Sarah Beth needed to come up with a service project to complete the main focus of Mr. Buckley's class. Coming up with the idea was fairly easy, but completing the task became a huge undertaking.

The trio put together flyers and made posters, usually distributing and displaying them near Milliken Soccer Field and at the middle-high school. They also had a homeroom contest at the middle school. Collection boxes at Milliken and CMHS were filled to the brim and the three girls began to deal with the problem of boxing and shipping the equipment.

During the collection period, two unexpected donations occurred. The Cohasset Soccer Club kindly donated dozens and dozens of mildly-worn soccer balls and bags, and another wonderful friend and booster of Cohasset soccer donated some brand new equipment, uniforms, pads, goalie gloves and other new soccer items to the cause.

Once the collection period ended, two more daunting challenges lay ahead: boxing and shipping. The equipment was brought to the CMHS locker room and easily took up a good portion of it. The girls spent days and days deflating each ball, cleaning and organizing equipment and packing them in boxes for shipping. Uniforms were organized, folded and boxed. The other miscellaneous articles were cleaned and packaged.

Finally, more than 150 soccer balls, 454 pairs of cleats, 75 jerseys, 100 pairs of shorts, pads, gloves, ball bags and equipment bags were securely packaged and labeled.

But who would pay for the shipping? Thanks to the Cohasset Soccer Boosters, the girls had nothing to worry about. The Boosters generously provided over $250 in postage to "PASSBACK" 14 boxes providing much-needed equipment to a group of youngsters in Zimbabwe, Africa.

DESTINATIONS

Discover the Galapagos Islands

By BEN LYONS
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

GALAPAGOS ISLANDS, Ecuador -- No matter how many National Geographic specials you've seen or how many stories you've heard, nothing prepares you for the Galapagos Islands. This is a place where you can swim inches away from sea lions and sidestep hundreds of marine iguanas. The catch is, to explore the islands, you need to travel by water.

I went with the well-established Lindblad Expeditions, which operates the 80-passenger MS Polaris here.

Sailing everywhere from Antarctica to the Columbia River in Oregon, Lindblad is deeply committed to ecologically sensitive tourism. Strong parternships with National Geographic and the World Wildlife Fund have helped it build a large base of loyal passengers who, like the infinitely curious Charles Darwin who made these islands famous, want to see, do and learn as much as possible.

From our first landing in one of the ship's inflatable Zodiacs, we came shockingly close to the animals. Numerous sea lions were lethargically draped across our path, and as we stepped around them, they looked at us with only a casual indifference. Just a few feet beyond, we were again blocked by a jumble of prehistoric-looking marine iguanas. It was immediately obvious we were the ones who had to make way for the animals, as they were not moving for us.

Visiting nine islands in seven days, my fellow Polaris passengers and I got the point that this is a Mother Nature hotspot. With all the animals we viewed, I was surprised I found the birds among the most appealing. Being able to walk up to hundreds of them at close range made bird watching far more interesting than that thing with binoculars.

A male Frigate bird with its inflated red pouch that is expanded during mating season

Most endearing were the comical blue-footed boobies. Walking through a vast colony of them, as they lifted one foot, bent their wings and whistled shrilly during their mating dance, reminded me of a Monty Python skit.

Perhaps the highlight for me, however, was sharing a beach not with tourists but with sea lions. Streamlined and sleek, curious babies came face to face with our snorkel masks before teasingly veering off and looping around again in a playful manner.

Most days on the Polaris followed the same basic structure, with swimming, snorkeling, walking or going for a ride in a Zodiac repeated daily. Some days started as early as 6 a.m., when we went on optional pre-breakfast hikes and Zodiac rides.

There are always numerous opportunities for photographers- here, a passenger photographs sea lions

Longer excursions followed breakfast and lunch, when we climbed into Zodiacs and went looking for giant tortoises or snorkeled with a feeding sea turtle while sharks coolly swam past. Snorkeling excursions were divided into different activity levels, allowing experienced swimmers to go to deepwater sites while those less confident swam off the beach.

Walks varied by length. For those who didn't want to walk at all, longer Zodiac rides surveying the coast were offered. Two scuba dives and a short uphill bike ride also were available.

In the evening, a short presentation by an onboard naturalist about the natural history of the islands preceded dinner. Afterward, activities included videos or a gathering on a darkened deck to identify with a laser pointer the constellations -- more than most had ever seen. By 10 p.m., most passengers were in bed, tired but enthused.

Lindblad's reputation for having top-notch naturalists was well-founded -- we had an ornithologist, a geologist and an "underwater specialist" onboard. We learned a lot during lectures, on hikes and even at dinner when the scientists joined passengers.

The array of tools at their disposal included a video microscope for presentations, a hydrophone that could broadcast whale songs throughout the ship and underwater cameras that filmed each day's swims and marine life.

Though most passengers were 50 and older, almost all were active and negotiated the occasionally tricky transfer between the ship and the Zodiac with ease. Families come onboard mainly in summer.

After a 40-year career that included decades of worldwide cruising, the cozy and charming Polaris has settled into year-round Galapagos sailings. With a simple lounge, an intimate library and an attractive, wood-paneled dining room, the atmosphere onboard was casual and never required dressing up. The food onboard was surprisingly good and featured local ingredients and some Ecuadorian dishes.

Cabins are snug, as is common on expedition ships, but attractive and with ample storage. A masseuse tends to a small gym and spa and leads stretching at sunrise on the top deck. The spa even offers a small anchored boat with a glass bottom, allowing you to be massaged outdoors while peering at the marine life below.

All in all, the ship offered comfort while still providing a sense of exploration and excitement.

By the end of the week, I had almost come to take the islands for granted until I was instantly reminded how removed I was from the real world. Overhearing a teenage passenger say to an Ecuadorian crew member, "They call this an iPod," I knew that even though Darwin would find his outdoor laboratory much the same, the inevitable march of time was finding the Galapagos.

Rates for 10-day expeditions on the Polaris (including two nights at the Hotel Hilton Colon) are from $3,650 per person, double occupancy. Lindblad also recently introduced the smaller, more modern Islander in the Galapagos, with rates for 10-day expeditions from $3,650 per person. Go to www.expeditions.com or call 800-EXPEDITION.

Dickstein draws on memories in creating 'Women' music

National Touring Company, Little Women - The Broadway Musical.

Like many people, Mindi Dickstein was still in grade school in Brookline when she first discovered Louisa May Alcott's classic coming-of-age novel "Little Women." Those childhood memories came in handy years later when Dickstein was chosen to write the lyrics for "Little Women: The Broadway Musical" which opens this week at Boston's Opera House.

Mindi Dickstein

"I read my mother's copy of the book when I was 12 years old," Dickstein recalled last week by telephone from her home in Bloomingdale, N.J. "I remember being very torn about which girl I was. I knew I wanted to be a writer like Jo, but I also like to think I was pretty like Amy or Meg or sensitive like Beth. I re-read it when I first started working on the show and everything came back to me. I could really understand the power of each of the four sisters and the mother. The strength of their characters, their creativity, and their passion for each other is so clear. They're wonderful women."

A Boston Children's Theater alum, Dickstein first signed on to "Little Women: The Broadway Musical" six years ago when she and Concord's Jason Howland replaced an earlier songwriting team on the project. Dickstein and Howland were new to the show, but the existing libretto by Allan Knee was retained.

"We were initially given six months to write a score that was supposed to play the Wilbur Theatre in 2000 prior to what was supposed to be a fall opening on Broadway that same year," Dickstein recalls.

When backers pulled out in 2000, the project embarked on a longer road to Broadway — which it finally reached just a year ago — including workshops at Duke University and the addition of Susan H. Schulman ("The Secret Garden") as the production's new director. For the next five years, much would change about the show but Dickstein's commitment to the story of the March sisters' life in New England during the Civil War only grew stronger.

"What we were given was a libretto without songs," Dickstein says of Knee's work. "His scenes were very moving from the first read. Part of the reason that I knew that I really wanted to do this show was that I knew Allan had such a great sense of Jo's passion and her yearning to be her own woman, which I think is very true to the novel and to Louisa May Alcott."

Dickstein, who received her master's degree from New York University's Graduate Music Theater Writing Program, often writes both book and lyrics as she is on her current project, "Strange Vacation," a new musical commissioned by New York's Playwright's Horizon. Dickstein, however, also appreciates good source material like that provided by Alcott.

"For me there is liberation in writing lyrics based on already existing material. I don't have to figure out how to write a good story. 'Little Women' is already a good story."

"Little Women: The Broadway Musical," starring Maureen McGovern, will be at the Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston, through Jan. 22. For tickets and information, call 617-931-2787 or visit www.broadwayacrossamerica.com.

La Presidente de Tourvel (Yvonne Woods) confesses a secret to Madame de Rosemonde (Alice Duffy) in the Huntington Theatre Company's production of "Les Liaisons Dangereuses".

A wicked good time at the Huntington

Theater stages 'Les Liasons Dangereuses'

Eighteenth-century games of love, lust and betrayal are currently heating up the Huntington Theatre as the Boston company stages Christopher Hampton's "Les Liaisons Dangereuses." As cast member Alice Duffy — who plays Madame de Rosemonde — sees it, however, the story isn't just a period piece that played out in the Parisian bedrooms and salons of the 1780s.

"It's set in the 18th century, but it's really a universal story about immoral, amoral, hedonistic people who are participants in their own destruction," explained Duffy by telephone recently from her Hingham home. "At one point my character says it surprises her how little things change. And I think she is right."

One of the things that doesn't change is the kindly woman's devotion to her nephew, the rakish Vicomte de Valmont, played by television and film actor Michael T. Weiss, who partners with a former flame to seduce her former lover's bride-to-be in this adaptation of the original novel by Choderlos de Laclos.

"My character is a counter-balance to all the wickedness around her. She's just a nice old lady. Madame loves her nephew who is this handsome, dashing, lecherous, immoral and amoral man with great charm. She looks for the good in him, however, because she is his protector. Madame is a great lady and a very wealthy woman who never had any children of her own. She has been very close to her nephew since his infancy. She loves him dearly and, as such, is willing to turn a blind eye on occasion. Madame is not stupid. She is just a realist," says Duffy, 77, who has previously appeared at the Huntington in "A Month in the Country," "Dead End," and "Heartbreak House." "She well understands the libertine nature of the society in which she lives."

That society was first described in the novel published in 1782 which Hampton adapted for a 1987 Broadway production starring Alan Rickman. The following year, Hampton adapted his play for the Academy Award-winning film version starring Glenn Close, John Malkovich, Michelle Pfeiffer, Keanu Reeves, and Uma Thurman. Helping the Huntington convey its own highly stylized and stylish view of that society is a team led by director Daniel Goldstein, set designer James Noone, costume designer Erin Chainani, composer Loren Toolajian who provides an original score, and a cast of 10. Creative teams may alter the look of the piece, but the story remains the same.

"This is a complicated play about some very wicked people who ultimately get what they deserve. Goodness knows, we live in a naughty world. We always have," says Duffy. "There really isn't anything too strange about what these characters are doing. Every generation has these sorts of people."

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is being presented by the Huntington Theatre Company at the Boston University Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston, through February 5. For tickets and information, call 617-266-0800 or visit www.huntingtontheatre.org

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

PLUGGING A CONCERT

No matter where you sit at a music concert, wear earplugs. So say researchers who dispatched teams of listeners to heavy metal, pop, and country rockabilly concerts. The listeners ranged in age from 17 to 59, and before the concerts, each had undergone an audiogram, which showed that all had (near) normal hearing "thresholds" (softest sound that one can hear on an audiogram). Teams of two were assigned to sit together at different locations in concert halls, from front to rear and side to side. Only one member of each team wore earplugs. After the concerts, when the audiograms were administered again, 64% of those not wearing earplugs had significant threshold shifts, compared with 27% of those wearing earplugs.

Our noisy world offers no guarantees that we'll have perfect hearing throughout our lives. We must accept the responsibility of protecting our hearing in our recreational pursuits and our home and work environments, and do all we can to correct impairments. Have your hearing checked at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. Here at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, helping you achieve your optimum hearing potential is our only business. PH: 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health. We also have an office in Abington, and you can visit us on the web at www.familyhearing.net.

P.S. A threshold shift is a decrease in the ability to hear.

Expert to talk about violence prevention

Another note found Tuesday

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A string of threats at the middle-high school has led school administrators and the police department to seek some outside expertise.

"We all as a community have a responsibility when it comes to youth in crisis."
— Police Chief James Hussey

The first week of January, Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh announced Dr. Robert Macy, director of community services for the trauma center in Boston, will be at the middle-high school Monday, Feb. 13 to share his tips for violence prevention with the community. In light of the most recent threat which took place at the middle-high school Tuesday (Jan. 24) it seems Macy could not be coming at a better time.

Landfill site on the table

By Samantha Brown

The alternative energy committee and board of selectmen would like to see land located near the town landfill tested to see if it would be a site suitable to host a wind turbine.

The committee has been working with the Massachusetts Technology Collaborative on the wind turbine initiative. Turbines must be installed on town-owned land, and the committee found much of what the town owns is swamp. However, there were some potential spots located, including land in Whitney Woods, land on Turkey Hill and land near the middle-high school.

Committee member Mike Bliss explained while the middle-high school land is a good option and the wind turbine would be able to provide power for the building, there is a water

Lot-size requirement could curb village housing project

Zoning amendment to be sought

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Local developer Wayne Sawchuk's proposal to expand the 1811 Samuel Bates House in the village, increasing its footprint by some 6,000 square feet, and adding retail space on the first floor and 12 units of affordable housing for seniors on its upper floors, could hinge on whether Town Meeting agrees to amend the zoning bylaw.

As it stands now without a variance, the zoning bylaw would prohibit the project because the lot where the Bates House sits is less than 40,000 square feet. According to the zoning board of appeals, the current bylaw (section 5.3.1) prohibits adding multi-family dwellings in the downtown business district on lots less than that size.

It's not likely Sawchuk's plans would meet the strict variance test enumerated in the bylaw so the zoning board suggested he ask the planning board to draft an amendment to the bylaw about changing the 40,000 square-foot requirement, noting that no lot in the village meets that criteria. The planning board must hold a public hearing on proposed bylaw changes before Town Meeting.

A recently reconstituted zoning advisory committee has been meeting to draft articles to amend several bylaws including the one that has currently curbed Sawchuk's plans. The next ZAC meeting is Monday (Jan. 30) at 7 p.m.

At this past Monday's meeting, officials speculated the 40,000-square-foot requirement was adopted as far back as 1978 to prevent Cohasset Village from becoming more residential with less business. But a more recent 2003 bylaw allows stores in combination with apartments and condominiums in the village as a matter of right rather than a special permit. The bylaw states the units would have to be created in con-

Jenkins to try again for school board

Carr, Hill to run for selectman

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Leonora "Lee" Jenkins, who narrowly lost to Pam Wilson in last year's school committee race, will try again.

Wilson, who plans to seek reelection, edged out Jenkins by just 33 votes last April to fill a one-year, unexpired term on the school committee.

Roger Q. Hill of 19A Highland Ave., and Edwin G. "Ted" Carr of 88 S. Main St. have pulled papers for selectman Michael Sullivan's seat. Sullivan is not seeking reelection.

This year, however, there won't be a head-to-head rematch between Jenkins and Wilson for the school committee because there are two seats up for grabs, both for full, three-year terms.

Last year Chartis Tebbetts resigned from the school board with one year left on her term that is being filled by Wilson, who is a local real-estate agent. Long-time member and former chairman Rick Flynn has announced he will not seek a third term. However, the school committee race could get crowded depending on how many others pull papers which are available at the Town Clerk's office through Feb. 16.

Jenkins, 57, a resident since 1978 whose two daughters attended Cohasset schools, says she cares deeply about Cohasset schools and believes there are fresh and creative ways to achieve the education Cohasset children need to succeed in today's competitive world rather than just steadily increasing the tax burden on local citizens.

Town Census for 2006

The Town Census for 2006 has been mailed to each household. Information obtained from the census is ultimately used to prepare the street list, annual registry of voters, school list, dog owner list, and jury list. It also establishes eligibility for resident's tuition at state colleges, for veteran reimbursement, for senior citizen programs and other benefits. The census provides valuable information to various departments throughout the town.

Dog forms are on a tear off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2006. Dog forms need to be returned as soon as possible although you may have recently renewed your 2005 license. If you did not receive your census, call the Town Clerk's office at 781-383-4100.

Developers hit roadblock for Castle Road subdivision

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The public hearing for the proposed Castle Road subdivision has been continued for at least another two weeks.

Issues concerning frontage and access may have caused a slight roadblock for developers, who are trying to build five new single family homes on the 14-acre site, accessed off Castle Road, which is off South Main Street.

Business partners David Calhoun and Tom Ragno of King Taylor Cohasset, LLC came before the planning board Wednesday to continue the public hearing for the project. Early on in the discussion, planning board member Stuart Ivimey asked developers if they were intending on building Castle Road up to subdivision standards. When developers replied they did not, Ivimey said, "Then I have a very big problem with you having frontage — none of these lots has frontage."

For a subdivision to be built, it is required to have frontage on an accepted public way. Board members disagreed whether Castle Road, located off South Main Street, provides the frontage necessary for development.

Ivimey said Castle Road "is currently a trail" and if it is not going to be built to subdivision standards, he does not see how it can provide the frontage the development will need.

But member Bob Sturdy said the town's bylaws allow the board to waive subdivision requirements in special circumstances. He said bringing the roadway up to standard would impact abutting wetlands. In addition, the development has another means of access through a Cedarmere roadway called Manor Way.

Developers plan to build five homes on the 14 acre site, and leave the home which currently exists, which was formerly owned by Charles Flint. Flint had an easement over the Cedarmere property which allowed him to access his property. That easement is being paved and turned into Manor Way, which will be a proper subdivision roadway. That roadway will essentially be extended to service the Castle Road subdivision.

However, Ivimey pointed out, "We've never allowed frontage off a subdivision."

Member Peter Pratt said he wondered how the board would not be exposing itself to lawsuits if it allowed frontage off Manor Way. He said historically the board has been against "daisy-chaining," which is allowing a piece of property to take frontage from another subdivision and create a subdivision off of it.

But member Mike Westcott pointed out the property in question has always had access through the subdivision which makes the case unique.

"I don't think there's anything special here about anything," said Ivimey.

Ivimey added he thinks the board would be creating a horrible precedent if it allows the development to take access and frontage from another pre-existing subdivision. "There is no frontage from the lots to the street via a subdivision road. This is a terrible slippery slope we're embarking upon," he said.

The board could not come to a consensus on the matter and asked Town Counsel to provide something in writing outlining his position on the matter. In turn, attorney for the developer Walter Sullivan said he would provide a response to Town Counsel's opinion before the next hearing. The planning board will take the matter up again Feb. 8.

New Web site helps neighbors in need

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset is a town full of generous residents eager to donate to causes far and wide. But when tragedy strikes at home, the response is even more overwhelming, which can easily be seen in the outpouring of support for the Doonan family of Jerusalem Road.

A fire on New Year's Day left the Doonan family home uninhabitable. However, before the last of the embers had been put out, neighbors had already sprung into action, asking for donations of every kind. While there were many generous offers, there needed to be some organization. That is when the Doonans' neighbor George McGoldrick stepped in with the idea to create a Web site for the cause.

McGoldrick said there were many phone calls made by residents who wanted to help the family in any way they could and wanted to know if the family had any specific needs. McGoldrick then thought it might be easier to keep track of donations if there was a way to get the information on the Internet. He contacted Highland Avenue resident and web designer Melissa Clark, who owns her own design company appropriately called Melissa Clark Designs, to see if she would be interested in creating a site to help the cause.

Clark said when she got the call from McGoldrick, it was just the thing she needed to take the initiative to get the site she had in her mind up and running.

"Melissa had always thought about doing something like this," said McGoldrick, adding there are needs in every town that often neighbors can meet. If there is a death in the family, someone has a sick child, or a tragedy of any kind takes place, often neighbors are ready and willing to help as much as they can.

Clark said when she got the call from McGoldrick, it was just the thing she needed to take the initiative to get the site she had in her mind up and running. She had always envisioned a site that would essentially provide a wish list for residents and non-profit groups in the community, and now that Web site, dubbed Cohasset Cares, is up and running.

"Right now it is based on collecting for the Doonans," she said, but she hopes it will evolve into a message board where anyone from leaders of the Appalachia Service Project to the art boosters can make their needs known and feel comfortable asking for help.

McGoldrick said he understands sometimes people can be hesitant to ask for help. He said at first, the Doonans did not want to be featured on the site, but when they found out about the larger goals he and Clark had in mind, they were willing to participate in order to give the site a jump-start.

"This can grow in any direction," said McGoldrick, adding already some of the donations which were offered to the Doonans but were not needs the family had, are being given to other organizations. He said Wellspring in Hull is in the process of expanding into another building and is in need of furniture, and furniture the Doonans did not need is now being passed on because the town was able to identify Wellspring's needs.

"As long as people provide us with their needs" the site can get the word out to others, said Clark. "We can't pull people's needs out of hats."

For more information, please visit www.cohassetcares.com. The site has e-mail links for those who would like to make a donation or ask for help fulfilling the needs of other residents or organizations.

A parent, waiting to pick up her child, stands at the edge of the walkway on Old Pasture Road that leads to the Osgood School. With the Sohier Street detour some parents have been leaving their cars standing on Old Pasture while they walk their children to school.

Police urge parents to follow the rules

The Cohasset Police department and MBTA liaisons ask residents to obey the signage on Old Pasture Road and not park in front of the paved path. With the closure of Sohier Street for Greenbush line construction, some parents have been using the path as a means of access to the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, leaving their cars parked and running while they walk their children to school.

Police Chief James Hussey said the path, which is roughly 5 feet wide, is an emergency driveway, and "we don't want that impeded." He said especially with Sohier Street closed, the path provides a means for public safety vehicles to access the schools and Sohier Street in an extreme emergency. "It is very important people don't park at or near the egress," he said.

School Web site full of information

The school committee is urging the public to add www.cohassetk12.org to their "favorites" list. The school district Web site is full of information for all three schools, and is continually being updated. School committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said if parents are looking to find out what's going on at their child's school, the Web site can be a valuable resource.

tower in close proximity and when the wind blows from the west, "there could be turbulence." Turbines need an undisturbed flow of wind to operate to their fullest potential.

The MTC had visited the site and would be in favor of installing a meteorological tower for pre-testing of the site.

The area in Whitney Woods is far away from everything, which would make it difficult for anyone to use the energy a turbine would generate. "The same thing goes for Turkey Hill," said Bliss.

Bliss said he had spoken with Kristen Burke, wind siting and project manager for MTC, and she had suggested the land near the landfill be tested as a potential spot. The MTC had visited the site and would be in favor of installing a meteorological tower for pre-testing of the site. The tower is installed at the site where a turbine would be located and remains for one year as a means of measuring and monitoring wind at the proposed location throughout all four seasons. The data then helps the town determine whether the turbine would be a feasible power source. There is no charge to the town during the feasibility study.

The board of selectmen agreed it has nothing to lose by going forward with testing on the site.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Schools participate in METCO job fair

Cohasset schools are trying to attract a diverse teaching population and will be participating in a job fair sponsored by the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, or METCO program. The fair will be held Saturday, Feb. 4 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the South Shore Charter School in Norwell.

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh said Cohasset is excited about participating in the fair and said she thinks it provides an opportunity for Cohasset to sell itself to the larger community. "I think it does as much for us as it does for prospective employees," she said.

Walsh said Cohasset offered its buildings as a potential site for the job fair, but "the train doesn't stop here yet," and people felt it was a little too far off the beaten path. "Maybe in the future," she said.

Companies show interest in Cook Estate project

The new Request for Proposals for the Cook Estate project has been available since Jan. 18. Already, the town has had 12 companies or individuals pay the $25 fee to obtain a copy of the document, including: Accord Development Corp. of Norwell; Bay View Development of Quincy; BR Development of Hingham; Brian Heggie of Cohasset; Bristol Bros. Development of South Weymouth; Cohasset Associates of Cohasset; Deer Hill Partners of Braintree; Fennell Development, Inc., of Boxford; Powers Realty & Development of Cohasset; Russ Development of Boston; Witsop Development Group of Norwell; and Wyman St. Advisors of Waltham. Bid submissions must be received by the town by Feb. 17.

Board of selectmen change meeting date

The board of selectmen will meet Monday Feb. 13 instead of Tuesday, Feb. 14. Selectman Gary Vanderweil pointed out the 14th is Valentine's Day and some of the board members may want to celebrate. The board agreed to change the date.

Carr, Hill to enter selectman's race

Leonora "Lee" Jenkins

Pam Wilson

Roger Hill

Ted Carr

"I'm not alone in these beliefs," said Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road. "At the April '05 annual Town Meeting, the report issued by the School Budget Investigation Committee had four key recommendations: to develop a truly realistic and balanced school budget within available revenues; to have the school committee involved on a monthly basis to become aware of deficits and develop solutions; to share financial information with the town; and to put an end to the idea that overrides are an annual necessity."

Wilson, 42, of 80 N. Main St., who had internet service problems this week, did not receive telephone messages from the Mariner left on Monday and again on Wednesday evening in time to comment for this week's paper. "Since it is so late in the process, I will give you an explanation of my interest in seeking reelection to the school committee next week. Thanks for your effort," Wilson wrote in an email message early Thursday morning.

Carr, 37, who is a partner in a consulting business, worked for eight years in the Clinton administration. "I saw an opportunity to serve when Michael Sullivan said he wasn't running again," said Carr, who has lived in town 2-1/2 years. "I miss public service."

Carr says pressing issues for Cohasset include town growth, the effect of the train, the tax situation, the unresolved teachers' contract, and economic development.

Hill, 45, a commercial property owner in Cohasset, has served on the advisory board for the past three years.

"My experience in local government and longevity in town are important assets that will be needed in helping to guide the town and its citizens toward a positive future," said Hill, a life-long resident and a seasoned campaigner. In 2002, Hill gave incumbents Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris a scare, coming within about 100 votes in that three way race for two seats on the board of selectmen. The following year, Hill came in second behind Michael Sullivan and ahead of Gabriel Gomez in a three-way race for one seat on the board.

In addition to Pam Wilson, the following incumbents have pulled nomination papers indicating their interest in seeking reelection: planning board member Peter Pratt; water commissioner John McNabb; sewer commissioner John Beck; Peggy Chapman of the board of health; Lisa LoJacono for recreation commission; and assessor Michael C. Patrolia.

There are three seats available on the Board of Library Trustees. Incumbents Patience Towle and Agnes McCann have pulled papers, as has Elizabeth Baker, who would be seeking her first term. Library trustee Carol Riley has indicated she won't seek another term.

Nomination papers for the 2006 annual Town Election are available at the Town Clerk's Office at Town Hall. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, Feb. 16.

In order to hold an elected office, a potential candidate must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that a person is not running for office until he or she takes out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies the signatures collected on the nomination papers. Positions available for the 2006 town election include:

- Selectmen - One for three years
- School Committee - Two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - Three for three years
- Assessor - One for three years

Friday, March 10 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting to be held on Saturday, April 1, and for the Annual Town Election to be held on Saturday, April 8.

Community Blood Drive scheduled for Feb. 1

To give blood, potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in good health.

Since 1970, January has been recognized as National Blood Donor Month. At this time, donations of all blood types are needed to meet the needs of patients in local hospitals as well as those throughout New England. To help ensure an adequate blood supply, the American Red Cross once again joins with the Town of Cohasset in the hope that residents will take some time out of their busy lives to give the Gift of Life. This year's Red Cross Blood Drive will be held Wednesday, Feb. 1, at St. Anthony's Parish Hall, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, from 1 to 7 p.m. Childcare will be available from 3 to 5 p.m. All donors will receive an entry into the weekly "Warm Your Heart" drawing for $200 toward monthly heating costs.

Everyone, whether it is realized or not, depends on blood. Every two seconds, someone needs blood. Each day, patients across the country receive approximately 38,000 units of this lifesaving resource. This year, as many as five million patients will require blood transfusions as accident victims, people undergoing surgery, and patients receiving treatment for leukemia, cancer and other diseases.

To give blood, potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in good health. Most medications and medical conditions do not prohibit a person from being a blood donor. Donors can give blood safely every eight weeks. To make an appointment to donate call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 781-383-1290, or the Red Cross Blood Services at 1-800-448-3543, or visit www.givelife.org. For information on the blood donation process and current eligibility guidelines visit www.newenglandblood.org.

Community to learn lesson on violence prevention

At roughly 11:45 a.m. Tuesday, Cohasset police were called to the middle-high school to investigate a threatening note found in one of the student bathrooms. The note, which was recovered by a high school student, references the deadly shooting which took place at Columbine High School in 1999.

School remained in session all day Tuesday and classes were undisturbed while members of the police department conducted an investigation. Officers interviewed school staff members to determine who might have been out of the classroom at the time the note was left and who might have had access to a computer, as the note was typed and not handwritten. Police Chief James Hussey said he feels there was no imminent danger to students Tuesday, and the school continues to be a safe place. "We feel we have plenty of police presence in and outside the school to provide safety for our students," he said.

Hussey said the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office as well as the FBI's behavioral science unit are helping with the investigation. "They will evaluate the content of the note and try to identify the type of person who would have authored the note," said Hussey of the FBI involvement. The FBI has also been involved in some of the prior school incidents. The DA's office has provided the school with an expert in computer forensics to help search the computers at the school for evidence.

But even with the extra help from the DA's office and the FBI, Hussey said it is extremely important for parents and students to come forward and assist the department with any information they can. "If anyone has any information, if anyone saw something or heard something, maybe even the day before the incident, anything they can give us will help. We need the assistance of the community," said Hussey.

With Macy coming to town, the community may soon have a much better understanding of behaviors to look for which may indicate there is a problem with a student. When Hussey was a member of the Boston Police Department he worked with Macy, and said he was a very beneficial asset to have when a rash of teen suicides broke out in a Boston community. "The number was off the charts," in terms of the number of teens who were committing suicide said Hussey, which caused the city much concern. "That's where he (Macy) became involved" to help residents identify the warning signs before it was too late, he said.

Hussey said it is easy to see there is something going on with Cohasset's youth, as there are obviously one or more students who feel they are not part of the community and are acting out. "We all as a community have a responsibility when it comes to youth in crisis," said Hussey, adding Macy will help adults recognize the behaviors associated with the kinds of acts the school has been experiencing. "The untrained eye may miss those behaviors," he said.

Hussey said from working with Macy, he knows he will emphasize the parent's responsibility to say "no." He said there is a reason movies and video games are rated in terms of age-appropriateness and allowing children to watch mature movies or play mature video games at a young age could be part of the problem.

"We're very lucky to have someone coming in with this kind of expertise and credentials," said Hussey. "This is a great opportunity for our community to pull together and work together and get educated on how to best influence the well-being of our youth."

An anonymous tip line remains in place at the Cohasset Police Department. Anyone with information is encouraged to call (781) 383-1055 X1050. There is no caller ID function on the phone to ensure anonymity. Tips can also be sent to the Cohasset Police Department via e-mail. A link can be found on its Web site at www.cohassetpolice.com.

Robert Macy will be at Cohasset Middle High School Monday, Feb. 13 from 3 to 5 p.m. to meet with teachers, school staff members and members of the police department, and from 7 to 9 p.m. to meet with parents and interested members of the community. Childcare will be provided to ensure parents are able to attend. For more information, please call the office of the superintendent at (781) 383-6111.

Police Officer James McLean walks along the outside of the middle-high school at the end of the school day on Wednesday. There is a police presence at the school in response to the discovery of another threatening note.

String of threats at CMHS

- May 11, 2005: a threatening note and bullet are found outside the middle-high school by a faculty member opening the school for the day. Students are put into "lockdown" upon their arrival and are dismissed early to allow a thorough search of the school and its grounds.
- Sept. 26, 2005: Cohasset police respond to an alarm at the school, set off at roughly 1:30 a.m. Responding officers find a torn screen on the first floor of the middle school section of the building. Further investigation leads officers to find notes inside the building which indicate there is a bomb in the school. A written note on the front door has the same message. The Boston Bomb Squad is called in to investigate a suspicious package.
- Oct. 16, 2005: A written note is discovered on school property by a teacher and students meeting to carpool to Boston. The note includes the threat to bring a gun to school, and in turn, Principal Joel Antolini decides backpacks, purses, and lunch bags are all subject to searches. School is delayed for two hours Monday, Oct. 17.
- Oct. 18, 2005: The middle school is closed for the entire day when police discover a threatening note at roughly 1:30 a.m. on the middle-high school sign at the school's entrance. The note indicates there is a bomb in the school. A 13-year-old student is arrested in connection with the threat, as well as the Sept. 26 bomb threat.
- Jan. 24, 2006: A high school student finds a threatening note which references the Columbine shooting of 1999 in one of the student bathrooms. Police respond to the scene at about 11:45 a.m., and conduct an investigation. A police presence will remain at the school until further notice.

Parents concerned about communication delay

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Some parents in town are concerned formal information about Tuesday's threat, which took place at 11:45 a.m., was not sent home to parents in the form of a Connect-Ed pre-recorded message until after 7 p.m. In fact, two mothers came to that night's selectmen's meeting to ask Police Chief James Hussey questions about the incident. Hussey had attended the meeting to discuss the police department budget.

Cohasset Middle High School Principal Joel Antolini said the school department "tried to send out a message at a time when it would be most well received, before evening activities and after parents returned home from a later day at work." He said if the message had been sent when potentially only the children are home, there is a greater chance the message might have been deleted before parents would have been able to hear it.

Antolini said parents should not worry about the safety of their children, as there is a police presence at the school and it will remain until further notice. "They are as safe today as they were yesterday," he said during an interview Wednesday morning. "With all of our staff and a heightened police presence, there are many people paying attention to behavior in the building," he said.

While visitors to the school may have noticed staff members are wearing ID badges around their necks, Antolini said it has nothing to do with the recent incident. "Parents just may want to know who's working with their students," he said, and ID badges are a quick way for parents to read the name and title of the staff member if they visit the building. Antolini said other than the police presence, the threat will not affect the way school is being run, which includes being able to bring backpacks to school.

Students had previously been instructed to not bring backpacks into the school in light of threats dealing with guns and bombs. After Thanksgiving, the faculty, through many meetings, decided it would be OK for backpacks to once again be allowed, if only kept in student lockers during the day. Up through Christmas, students were gradually allowed to bring backpacks back into the classrooms, with the understanding each teacher could decide whether they felt comfortable with the practice in their individual rooms. Students are still able to bring backpacks to class with permission from the classroom teacher.

Antolini said at Cohasset Middle High School, the goal remains to first and foremost provide an education for the children who attend. He said the incident did not affect attendance as roughly 95 percent of students were present Wednesday morning. He said that number may actually be higher, as some students were tardy due to traffic problems resulting from an accident on Rte. 3A, and may have been marked absent.

Antolini said it is imperative parents talk to their children about the incident. "Maybe a friend of a friend will have heard something and that may be a tip we need," he said. Antolini encouraged parents and students to come forward with any information, even if it seems small, either through the police department's anonymous tip line at (781) 383-1055X1050 or by sending an anonymous e-mail by visiting the Cohasset Police Department's Web site at www.cohassetpolice.com.

Cohasset acquires Brass Kettle Conservation area

The town has just erected an information kiosk on King Street in a small parking area leading into 100 acres of open space bounded by Lily Pond, 824 acres of The Trustees of Reservations Whitney Thayer Woods including Turkey Hill and 4,000 acres of Wompatuck State Park.

Altogether these properties offer many miles of lovely uninterrupted walking trails, creating an interesting network that leads from the King Street trailhead to Lily Pond and west to Wompatuck Park, then north to Whitney Thayer Woods and Turkey Hill. Thanks to the vote of Cohasset citizens at the 2004 Town Meeting, the Water Department — together with generous financial assistance from the Cohasset Preservation Commission, grants from the state and the private Cohasset Conservation Trust — made the funding available to purchase the private lots of land comprising this conservation area. Cohasset has more than 30 percent of its landmass set aside as green space, which gives the town its unique character by having one of the finest coastlines and harbors on the South Shore together with an abundance of green space.

These 100 acres provide a vital conservation area and watershed for Cohasset's drinking water supply at Lily Pond into which two tributaries flow, the major one being Brass Kettle Brook. The National Heritage and Endangered Species Program has identified the entire property and much of its surroundings as core habitat for rare species. There are more than 70 species of trees and plants inhabiting this woodland. Grouse, partridge and deer make the heavily wooded areas their home.

These 100 acres provide a vital conservation area and watershed for Cohasset's drinking water supply at Lily Pond into which two tributaries flow, the major one being Brass Kettle Brook.

This area is an important part of Cohasset's Colonial history dating back to 1770 when the Massachusetts General Court granted permission for Cohasset to separate from Hingham. The path from King Street, called Great Lot Lane on Gilbert Tower's hand-drawn Cohasset maps, was one of the roads that linked the two towns. It crosses two tributaries, bridged by rock slabs that once supported the weight of horses and wagons. The many stonewalls seen from the path are indications that the landscape was once cleared of trees for the grazing of livestock. Today, trees and undergrowth have once again reclaimed the land giving it the appearance that it had when Native Americans made this their home before it was settled. Several of the stonewalls follow the 18th-century narrow parcels of land along east-west property lines that comprised the way the town was divided into First, Second and Third Precincts.

At the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries, King Street was one of the major rural farm sections of town. Just yards from the parking lot stood the cider mill shed for the Samuel James Farm, which featured a one-horse-powered cider mill. For more detail about this area's geography and early Colonial times through the mid-20th-century, read Cohasset's first two histories, E. Victor Bigelow's Narrative "History of Cohasset," Volume I and Bertram Pratt's Narrative "History of Cohasset," Volume II.

Michelle, Peter and Anna Deininger admire new kiosk at the trailhead of Brass Kettle Conservation Area.

Residents are asked to stay in the path to avoid stepping on undergrowth and to respect the King Street neighbors' privacy. All refuse including animal should be picked up since this entire area is one of Cohasset's primary drinking water watersheds. Extra caution should be exercised when crossing Brass Kettle Brook especially during the winter months when the stones can become icy. During periods of heavy rain sections of the path, particularly Brass Kettle Brook, can become flooded and impassable.

Principal Antolini paints the CMHS budget picture

Nine new positions sought

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Reducing class sizes and offering more elective courses are top priorities at both the middle and high schools. That goal is reflected in the proposed fiscal 2007 middle-high school budget, presented by principal Joel Antolini at the Jan. 19 school committee meeting.

"I can tell you there are no staff reductions" in either of the schools' budgets, said Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh, which will help the school department stay on course with its 5-year strategic plan. The middle school and high school are located under one roof, but the schools are in the process of becoming two separate entities with their own philosophies and cultures. Antolini presides over both, but each school has its own assistant principal, and in turn, its own set of needs.

The total middle school budget for fiscal 2006 was $1,946,749. Antolini suggested an increase of $233,832 or roughly 12 percent, for fiscal 2007, which brings the budget up to $2,180,581. There are four new positions proposed for fiscal 2007, including one English and reading teacher for grade six; one foreign language teacher for grades seven and eight; one music teacher for grades six through eight; and one shared guidance/adjustment counselor for grades six through 12. All tolled, the positions would cost $180,000.

Antolini explained there are some concerns regarding the data collected for grade-six reading and language arts MCAS scores, which warrants hiring an English and reading specialist. "Students need additional support," he said. He added there is a new reading program being started at Deer Hill, and there needs to be someone on hand at the middle school to help keep that momentum going. He said the perfect candidate for the position would serve as a reading coach for students as well as other teachers.

The middle school would also benefit from a new foreign language teacher. Antolini said the ideal candidate would be someone who is fluent in both French and Spanish. He said by adding a staff member, it will help reduce class size.

The music teacher would be added as a way to "stabilize a program which currently has shared staff from Deer Hill and the high school," said Antolini.

Although it is only included in the middle-school budget, the new guidance/adjustment counselor would be shared by the schools. The new employee would provide adequate support for those already working in the guidance department, to help increase resources available for students. The new guidance/adjustment counselor would deal with specific social and emotional concerns, which would free up the other counselors to work with a broader spectrum of students on a day-to-day basis.

There are other additions proposed for the middle-school budget, including materials to start up a new technology education program for the sixth grade. "They're not being taught the content area in this age group," said Antolini, although technology will soon become part of the MCAS test.

To start the program, $20,900 has been added to the science purchases line item. Last year that line item totaled $2,600. Antolini said the program will be phased in over the course of three years.

School committee member Alfred Slanetz said while he was happy to see students will soon be learning about engineering and technology, "Why aren't you hiring a new engineering or science teacher for the new program?" he asked.

Antolini explained he wanted to produce a responsible budget, and therefore did not include the position. He added the school currently has a staff member who would be a perfect fit for the position.

At the high school, the fiscal 2006 budget was $3,718,192. It has increased by $577,202, or 15.5 percent, for a total of $4,295,394. The high school budget includes the custodial and utility costs for both schools. Requests have been made in the form of one new English language arts teacher; one new math teacher; one half-time foreign language teacher; one secretary/receptionist; and one half-time athletic trainer. Together, the five positions total $159,052.

Antolini explained "block scheduling" at the high school — which means students adhere to a schedule where classes are held for longer periods of time, but not all classes are attended every day — allows more material to be covered in a shorter amount of time, and therefore as students become juniors and seniors, they have sometimes taken all the classes the school has to offer. This is especially true with the math and English classes. In order to offer more courses, more staff is needed.

"Lots of classes have 30-plus students, and we have a limited number of electives. Next semester, kids will be forced to take study halls because they've maxed out on the courses we can offer them," said Antolini.

School committee chairman Jamie Wiliams asked whether students could take an independent study class or become involved in e-learning, meaning students could take classes on their own via the Internet during that study hall time. Antolini said some students are already taking classes on the Internet and independent study classes are offered as well. He said the school is also going to begin a peer-tutoring program, which could be conducted during study hall.

School committee member Adrienne MacCarthy asked Antolini to speak to the importance of offering more electives. "Are they crucial to the academic career?" she asked. Antolini said students need 175 credits to graduate, and only 16 classes are required, which means students must take a number of electives in order to graduate.

The half-time foreign language teacher would complement the half-time position which currently exists, and would reduce class sizes. It would also allow the school to be able to offer a sequence of classes for students, such as French I, II, III, IV, and advanced placement.

The half-time athletic trainer position was discussed in detail during the athletic budget discussion (see sidebar).

In the main office, there is currently only one employee, and Antolini said it is very important to have another secretary added to the budget. Antolini said if the current secretary has to leave the office for any reason, either the school nurse or a student volunteer must cover for her. However, visitors to the school are required to buzz in at the main office and students are not allowed to open the door, which means without another adult in the office, visitors can be left waiting outside until the secretary returns. The main office is far too busy to be staffed by only one person, he said.

Cohasset Middle High School currently has roughly 800 students, and Antolini said 90 percent of the student population has MCAS scores in the proficient or advanced category. "The budget process is very complex, and it has a lot of details," he said, adding he tried to present a budget which could provide diverse learning opportunities for students and keep their success going, while realizing the tough fiscal constraints.

The school committee was scheduled to hold another budget hearing Thursday, Jan. 26 after the Mariner went to press.

What's next for the school budget?

- Jan. 26: budget review meeting for entire school budget.
- Late January, early February: school committee presents budget to joint meeting of selectmen and advisory committee (exact date TBD).
- March 2: school committee public hearing on budget. School committee will also vote final adoption of budget and certify budget figure.
- March 17: budget document ready for distribution.
- April 1: Annual Town Meeting.

Athletic department makes a pitch for half-time trainer

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The school department is relying on the high school athletics department's anticipated revenues for fiscal 2007.

However, a successful athletics program is only as good as its athletes, and Athletic Director Ron Ford said it is imperative an athletic trainer be included in this year's budget to ensure the school's athletes are able to receive medical attention at a moment's notice.

Currently, the school department has a contracted part-time athletic trainer. She works with the students on a daily basis and the athletics department feels very fortunate to have her on board. Ford said prior to her arrival, he had advertised the position for a full year without any response. He said he would like to see the position become a half-time employee position, salaried at $18,900 per year with benefits. "We have to make the position attractive to keep her or be able to get someone else" in the future, if it becomes necessary, he said. "This is a position that makes sense."

The school is required to provide medical aid at every game as part of the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association rules. Ford said if the school does not have its own medical trainer on hand, it would have to pay for EMT coverage, which would likely be at least double the cost of having its own trainer present.

"I can't explain to you how important this position is. I can't be at every practice and I can't leave medical aid up to the coaches. We need a professional person in the building every day who can be the eyes and ears of the athletic department. It is critical," said Ford.

The total recommended athletics budget for fiscal 2007 is $298,292. That includes anticipated revenues in the amount of $81,000 from gate receipts and

Proposed school budget continues its uphill climb

Teachers' contract numbers not solid

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

As the weeks go on, the proposed fiscal 2007 school department budget continues to grow. Heating bills have come in which have bumped the schools' bottom line up by roughly $25,000 to $14,066,612, or a 13.95 percent increase over last year, not including anticipated offsets.

"We know that when you look at a 13 percent increase you choke — we all do — but there are fixed costs," said Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh during budget discussions with the school committee Thursday, Jan. 19.

The school department anticipates bringing in $81,000 from the athletics department from gate receipts and user fees. It also anticipate receiving $150,089 in circuit breaker reimbursement from the state, for costs related to special education. The schools will find out what the actual amount of funding will be once the state budget is finalized.

The school department also receives grant funding for taking part in the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, or METCO program, and anticipates having $86,980 available to help offset the budget. Combined, the three areas could leave the school department with $318,069 available to help bring the difference between this year's budget and last from $1,722,230 down to $1,404,161.

But those offsets may not amount to much when the contract is finalized with the Cohasset Teachers' Association. The CTA has been working without a contract since the beginning of the year, and without an agreement, there are no solid numbers to plug into the salary line items. Walsh has plugged in a cost of living increase figure of $238,655 as a placeholder, which could increase significantly once the contract is settled. Even with the offsets from athletics, circuit breaker and METCO funding, which help bring the school budget down, plugging in the placeholder figure for the cost of living increase, which is much less than it will be once the contract is settled, brings the total fiscal 2007 proposed budget up to $13,987,198.

The CTA has been working without a contract since the beginning of the year, and without an agreement, there are no solid numbers to plug into the salary line items.

"In order to open our doors in September, we need a 7 percent increase," said school committee chairman Jamie Williams, as she pointed out the contractual obligations and fixed costs prepared by Walsh amount to $637,109, or a 5.16 percent increase, and the minimal cost of living increase that has been factored in without being agreed upon by the teachers is an additional 1.93 percent increase over last year. Together, they equal a 7.09 percent increase over fiscal 2006.

Walsh noted Town Manager Bill Griffin has recommended an increase of $370,000 for the school department in his proposed fiscal 2007 general government operating budget. "That $370,000 wouldn't cover contractual obligations and fixed costs alone," she said.

She also said Griffin's figure is only a placeholder as only the school committee can decide on the final proposed budget figure for the school department. The number voted by the school committee "is the number that has to go in" the town's general operating budget, and must be voted on by Town Meeting, she said.

Walsh said virtually every school system in the state needs at least a 7 percent increase every year in order to maintain services. School committee member Rick Flynn said the school department is still playing catch-up from only receiving a 4 percent increase last year.

In fiscal 2004, the school department's budget was $11,418,429. With the passage of a $400,000 override for fiscal 2005, the budget increased by 4.6 percent to become $11,943,800. As the fiscal year went on, Walsh announced the numbers had been underbudgeted by roughly $500,000.

Roughly $160,500 ($93,500 for utilities and $67,000 for unemployment) was then put into the reserve fund to cover costs associated with fiscal 2005, followed by an additional $100,000 in the reserve fund for costs that might come up. Another $100,000 was also added directly into the school budget, which made an additional $360,500 available for its disposal on top of the budget allocation.

A few months into fiscal 2006, Walsh announced the school department had $190,652 left over from what was available in fiscal 2005, of which it used roughly $80,000 to pre-pay special education tuitions for fiscal 2006. From fiscal 2005 to fiscal 2006, the school department's budget was increased by $400,582, or 3.3 percent. The schools had gone for another $400,000 override for fiscal 2006, but it did not pass muster with the voters.

However, the school department did receive some additional funds for fiscal 2006 in the form of a state Foundation Reserve Award, dubbed a "pothole program," in the amount of $205,000. The money was awarded as a result of significant reductions in state aid, which is one of the priority categories set by the legislature.

Osgood School has fingers crossed for full-day K grant

Kids flock to new program

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Full-day kindergarten has proven to be a successful program in Cohasset. With only one session of roughly 11 half-day students, virtually all of the town's youngest students enrolled in the program this first year of operation.

But to keep the program going into the future takes money, and there are only two ways to generate the funding: continue imposing tuition fees, and go after grants.

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh has filed for a full-day kindergarten grant from the state. She said for the past two years the school department has been told money for programs such as the one Cohasset began this fall would be forthcoming, and it appears that time could be approaching.

"They're surveying the state to see how many full-day kindergarten classes there will be," said Walsh, adding schools must fill out applications for each classroom for the chance to receive $15,000 per room. Cohasset currently has five full-day kindergarten classrooms, meaning it could be eligible to receive $75,000 in grant funding.

The state has been singing the praises of full-day kindergarten programs, but has given limited start-up aid to communities who choose to begin the programs. Without help from the state, many communities will not be as fortunate as Cohasset and will not be able to get their programs off the ground.

"We put together what I believe is a very good grant proposal."
— Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan

The Massachusetts Department of Education is required to file a report to the House and Senate Committees on Ways and Means on the progress which has been made to increase the number of full-day programs, and ensure those which are operating are high quality. The report states to aid in that mission, for the past six fiscal years, the Commonwealth has been delegating funds to various school districts to help promote voluntary full-day kindergarten programs. Between two different grants under the state's Kindergarten Development Grant Program, schools have been given the funding both to begin full-day programs and keep them going.

Cohasset has applied for a "transitional funds" grant. First, the school must be deemed an eligible applicant by the state, and then it will be considered for the $15,000 per classroom award. If found eligible, the school district then automatically becomes eligible for a second grant — an $18,000 "quality of full-day kindergarten" grant, which is awarded in full, not by the classroom.

Osgood School Principal Janet Sheehan said Cohasset is unique because it has five full-day kindergarten classes which have just begun and the school will be proposing two new classes in 2006. She said before Cohasset began the program, it had been advised by the Department of Education not to apply for the grants to help get it started. However, now that the program is up and running, the school's circumstances have changed, she said.

"We have moved forward (with implementing full-day kindergarten) because of communication from the state and the community," said Sheehan. She said the town was able to provide documentation of the entire process leading up to beginning full-day kindergarten classes and the benefit it has to the town, thanks to the kindergarten task force which was very active in collecting data for the schools prior to the program's implementation.

"We have tremendous documentation from parent surveys to educational research. We put together what I believe is a very good grant proposal," said Sheehan.

However, Sheehan pointed out the grant process is a very competitive one and funds are usually awarded to lower performing school districts "so it'll be tough." She said the application makes it clear Cohasset cannot provide full-day kindergarten classes without charging tuition to students "and I think we made a good case" for receiving the money. If received, the funds would go toward teacher salaries, supplies, and additional professional development.

Walsh said the money will be awarded to schools likely in June, which means there is no way to know whether it should be factored into the fiscal 2007 budget. However, she wanted both the school committee and the public to know "we're being very proactive."

user fees. Anticipated funds to be generated by the local boosters clubs are not factored in, as they typically pay for items such as uniforms and equipment for athletes as well as celebratory banquets.

School committee chairman Jamie Williams asked whether there are funds allocated in the budget for ongoing maintenance costs such as refinishing the new gymnasium floor.

"We did it this year through an offset," said Ford, adding the floor was complete just before Christmas and it received a tremendous response from those who attended holiday tournaments. Ford added the winter is the best time to refinish the floors as it provides more protection from the salt and mud that is tracked in during that time. Moving forward, it is still unclear whether the town or the school department will pick up the cost for any further refinishing of the floors.

Under siege

We live in a post-Columbine, post-9-11 world in which every threat has to be taken seriously.

The days when a student pulled the fire alarm as a prank providing classmates with an unscheduled recess and got a slap on the wrist are well behind us.

Unfortunately here in Cohasset, the threats keep coming. It's unclear if the student or students responsible for Tuesday's threatening note have also been behind some of the previous incidents.

What we do know is that someone out there likely knows who the perpetrator or perpetrators are. It's critically important that these individuals come forward and report what they know to the police. Whoever is perpetrating these threats needs help and won't receive it if he, she, or they are not "caught."

To help all of us understand the mentality behind this type of destructive behavior, an expert on violence prevention has been invited to the middle-high school to provide insight and answer questions on the issue.

It is important that members of the community hear Dr. Robert Macy, from 7-9 p.m., Feb. 13. Please mark your calendars.

"This is a great opportunity for our community to pull together and work together, and get an education on how best to influence the well being of our youth," Police Chief James Hussey said.

Budgetary concerns

As reporters, we are not budget experts. Our job is to present the news in as clear a format as possible so our readers have the information they need and can get involved in the process and issues, if they choose to do so.

However, in his column, we provide the newspaper's view of what is taking place.

You don't have to agree with us; and we provide ample space for all opinion and rebuttal.

What we see currently emerging is a disturbing picture. The school department is not interested in providing a "balanced budget" to Town Meeting, as Town Manager Bill Griffin has requested.

From what we understand, Griffin's strategy behind the request is not to stop an override or dictate to the schools what they need to finance the school system. Simply put, a "balanced" budget within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 would eliminate the need for another Town Meeting to "balance" the budget should an override fail at the polls.

Cohasset has traditionally done the reverse. The town has passed its budget "contingent" on the passing of an override – then if the override fails, the budget is out of balance and has to be cut because there is not enough revenue to fully fund it.

Under the new system, a supplemental budget could be passed at Town Meeting, with specifics about what would be added in, contingent on an override passing.

So what's the problem with that?

On a related matter, while we're hearing a lot about what the schools would gain with a hefty budget increase, we think the point could be driven home about what specifically stands to be lost if the schools have to stay within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2. Tell us how big the classes would get and what programs and teachers would be cut.

When I walked downtown today I sadly compared it to the dump. I must apologize for my thinking, because when I went to the dump today it was much cleaner than the downtown.

I'm ashamed and disgusted not to mention embarrassed.

Cohasset schools are under-funded

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Mariner's editorial, Déjà vu, stated that the taxes paid by Cohasset residents are among the highest in the state, sure when you compare us to Rowe ($469) or Erving ($771) which have an industrial base. Both are nice towns, but I was not considering living in either. So let's compare apples to apples as the Town Bench Marking Committee suggests.

When compared to the 20 like communities suggested by the Bench Mark, Cohasset's tax rate is 10.84 right in the middle. Boxborough at 13.24 is the highest and Marion 7.00 is the lowest. The average family tax bill according to the Department of Revenue is $8,422 for Cohasset, putting us fifth behind Dover, Wayland, Lincoln and Sudbury.

I guess you wouldn't expect the schools to need so much considering our taxes. But where is the money going? Measuring school spending as a percentage of the overall town general expenditures Cohasset falls at the bottom of the list. Based on fiscal 2004 data, the latest available from the Department of Revenue shows only Southborough spends less of its overall budget on schools. What about debt? Most of these towns also have capital expenditures; yet their school budgets are still considered a top priority.

Many of the towns in the Bench Mark have regionalized high schools, meaning they share the cost of running a high school with other towns. It is more expensive to run a stand alone K-12 system. Cohasset spends a smaller percentage of the town budget to accomplish this. If Cohasset were to increase the percentage of the general revenue allocated to the schools to just the median of our Bench Mark communities we would not even need an override! Again, this increase would only put us in the middle of our Bench Mark communities in terms of school spending and would cover the additional $1.6 million proposed by Superintendent Walsh.

We have opened our wallets time and time again, but so have other Massachusetts communities. This is the legacy of Prop. 2-1/2. Ten of the bench mark communities approved overrides in fiscal 2006: Boxborough $1.0M, Wayland $2.3M, Marblehead $2.7M, Swampscott $2.2M, and Dover $.9M. Compared to our cohorts, the possibility of a $1.6 million override does not seem so out of line especially when historically our schools have received less of the overall town budget.

The Mariner suggests the school committee only request a budget increase of 6-7percent, as Dr. Malvey has in the past. At this rate we will not maintain the status quo. Last week the at school committee budget meeting, (which I attended and received the budget information at the meeting) Chairman Williams stated that it takes an extra 6-7 percent of additional funds just to open our doors every September. School committee representative Slanetz explained that continuously under-funding the school budget has a cumulative effect. The 6-7percent does not address added staff to cover rising enrollments. A consequence of the failed override last year, teachers requested to address increased enrollment at the high school went unfunded. The result — at least nine core classes have over 30 students in them and instead of taking advanced classes and expanding their knowledge base, students are forced to attend study halls.

The school committee doesn't have to illuminate the clear picture of what will happen if we stay with in Town Manager's Bill Griffin's proposed 3percent increase over last year. The 3percent doesn't even cover current contractual agreements and fixed costs. Teachers will be lost, class sizes will increase, and programming will be cut. This may be okay in other towns, but not in Cohasset, where we expect our tax dollars to fund excellent schools that we can be proud of. Let's open the door in September with appropriate staffing and programming to ensure our students have a quality education.

HEALTH NOTES

Resistance to some flu vaccines

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Jan. 14, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) announced that clinicians should not prescribe two common antivirals (amantadine and rimantadine) to treat or prevent influenza during the 2005-2006 influenza season. Recent testing by CDC concludes that the predominant strain of influenza in the US shows that it is resistant to these drugs. Fortunately, according to CDC Director Dr. Julie Gerberding. "We still have antivirals available that work but this new development serves as a reminder of the importance of getting people vaccinated to prevent them from getting influenza in the first place."

Influenza activity is starting to pick up across the country as 18 states are reporting either widespread or regional activity. Individuals who have not had flu shots can still get them especially since influenza will continue to circulate for several more months. This year over 80 million doses of vaccine have been distributed but remaining supplies vary. For Cohasset, we have had several clinics, and distributed most of the flu shots remaining after the clinics, to local physicians who can administer them. Also, CDC will have available 3.5 million doses from its stockpile to sell through manufacturers as soon as possible. Doses of vaccine are presently available for sale by manufacturers and distributors. Each year, the Board buys vaccines to supplement those supplied by the State.

According to the CDC, testing of influenza isolates for resistance to antivirals will continue throughout the 2005-2006 influenza season and recommendations will be updated as needed. In addition, CDC is working with state and local health departments and clinicians across the country to monitor drug resistance in influenza viruses. For more information see <www.cdc.gov/flu>.

Sohier Street closing is toughest of all

MAKING TRACKS

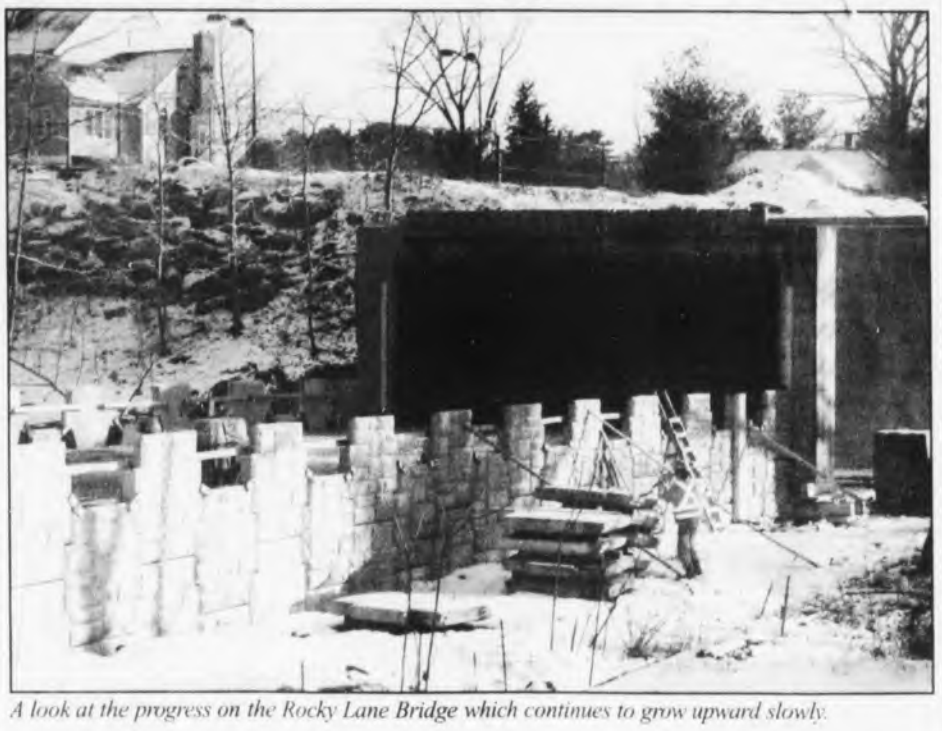
TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Well, the Sohier Street closure is now a fact. This is the most difficult crossing closure so far, for a number of reasons. Now, both the Osgood and Deer Hill schools can only be accessed from Route 3A. The same is true for the approximately 70 homes on Fair Oaks and Sohier Street. For all of the other road closures we have experienced so far, traffic can generally find alternate routes. After a time, everyone learns the "best" way to bypass the construction areas. Not for this closure – there is only one way in and one way out of Sohier Street.

We have worked closely with police, school administration and the school bus staff on Sohier Street to find the best way to provide the safest traffic management for our impacted schools and the local residents. When school is in session, we have provided traffic control officers at 3A and Sohier Street to control left and right turns onto 3A, both morning and afternoon. After several days experience, this seems to be working about as well as it can. Please give us a call with any observations you may have or any things that may need correction.

We had a meeting with Cashman, Balfour, Beatty, the Greenbush contractors, to review the engineering details of the Sohier Street grade crossing. This crossing is absolutely the most difficult crossing construction project in Cohasset. There are two culverts associated with James Brook to be replaced under the tracks. Additionally, a gas line, water line and a sleeve for a potential future sewer line which need to be replaced or added, at depths of up to 12 feet. Further, Cashman may have to deal with water from James Brook leaching into their trenches. Any wet weather will only exacerbate the job. A poured-in-place concrete retaining wall will also be constructed alongside James Brook. Only when these items are finished, can the actual crossing be constructed. As you can see, this is not a fun crossing for the contractor. Cashman has scheduled a four-month time period for constructing this crossing. As of now, Cashman has not completed a crossing ahead of schedule in our town. So, when Sohier will reopen is anyone's guess.

By the time you read this, Pleasant Street will also be closed. As we have mentioned before, if you use Smith Place as a detour, please be very respectful of this congested neighborhood with its narrow roads. The customers of James Brook Crossing will be able to access these stores and offices from Smith Place. The South Shore Art Center and the James Brook Crossing businesses will also be able to use the new parking lot across from James Lane on Pleasant Street and walk to their destination.



A look at the progress on the Rocky Lane Bridge which continues to grow upward slowly.

Rocky Lane

The Rocky Lane bridge continues to grow upward, slowly. The supports for the side walls are a very interesting. The precast cross-shaped side-wall pieces are set in place and lock together in a tongue and groove fashion. Crushed stone is filled in between them. If you think carefully about this, you might think that the weight of the stone pushing outward might make the walls push out and collapse. This is where the solution gets clever. Bolted to the inside of the precast wall sections are long galvanized flat steel straps with ridges in them. These strips reach from the inside edge of the wall sections to nearly the middle of the bridge ramp.

After a complete layer of these strips is set into place, the strips are covered with tightly compacted gravel. The friction between the gravel and the ridges on the straps actually holds the side walls in place and keeps them from bowing out. This sounds a bit like "boot strapping." It seems counterintuitive, but the design engineers tell us this construction technique works very well.

Collective failure blamed for Great Neck

So old houses tremble with each explosion, and large quantities of ledge are blasted apart and dumped free-form on the steep hillside directly above us.

As this old house shakes with each blasting of the granite ledge above us, a review is in order of Cohasset's collective failure to preserve a ledge-based woodland that for almost 40 years the town has unsuccessfully tried to set aside as open space. That is the pristine area above the town center known historically as Great Neck. Other parts of town could tell a similar tale.

Half of Great Neck was purchased several decades ago by public spirited citizens and donated to the town to be managed by the Conservation Trust. This is Great Brewster Woods, whose rocky pathways provide citizens a nearby piece of wilderness to enjoy. On the other half of Great Neck stands one house whose owners have volunteered their seven acres to be accessible for any future conservation use. The remaining 13.6 acres abutting the conservation land have long also been available for purchase or eminent domain-taking to create an integrated public recreational area long envisaged by town bodies.

In 1969 the Board of Selectmen, at the request of the Planning Board, asked the Conservation Commission to acquire for public purposes the then 20 or so remaining acres. The Commission voted to purchase or, if necessary, to explore taking that land "for town recreational purposes". In the end, nothing happened. Thirty-three years later, the Community Preservation Committee voted to contribute $600,000 toward the purchase for public purposes of what were now two strips of land on 13.6 acres. The Conservation Trust added another $100,000, an abutter offered additional land, and the 2002 Town Meeting voted enthusiastic approval of the CPC proposal. But one owner refused to sell, and a year later the money reverted to the CPC.

The residents of Beach Street worked for a decade to keep the ledge from being blasted away, and sought ways to preserve for public use the still-undeveloped rocky woodlands above them. Those who dismissed our concern as NIMBY were correct that some of us are directly and painfully affected. But they should know that we were joined throughout by individual members of town boards and other interested citizens concerned with the steady disappearance of open space. Some town boards also shared our concern, but seemed incapable of finding a basis for disapproving the developer's plan. Meanwhile, efforts to put reasonable limits on the destruction of irreplaceable ledge gained majorities in Town Meeting but failed to acquire two-thirds, thanks in part to insistence by some (including some Town officials) that "no one is going to tell me what I can or cannot do on my property".

So old houses tremble with each explosion, and large quantities of ledge (possibly including historic formations described in Bigelow's 1898 Narrative History of Cohasset) are blasted apart and dumped free-form on the steep hillside directly above us. What lessons can be drawn from this collective failure to act on the Town's oft-proclaimed commitment to preserve open space — including this space — for public use?

There is plenty of fault to go around — indifference of town officials; insufficient concern for possible fire and safety hazards; failure of wealthy residents to step up to the plate in time; lack of support from the local media; absence of coordination between town boards; and the narrow focus that kept at least one of them from exercising its legal authority to develop "a conservation and passive outdoor recreation plan" for areas "which public necessity requires to be retained for conservation and passive recreation use".

At the end of the day, nothing will take the place of actually implementing an effective and enforceable master plan for the Town of Cohasset. In the meantime, town boards will continue to operate without a coordinated vision or mandate, and more committees will be formed to discuss the need for better planning while the remaining open space in our beautiful town is blasted to make way for new mansions.

Lincoln P. Bloomfield has been a Cohasset resident for 49 years. He is professor of political science, emeritus, at MIT, and has served in the Navy, State Department, and National Security Council. His latest book is Accidental Encounters With History and some lessons learned, published in 2005 by The Hot House Press in Cohasset.

What's up with the school budget?

COMMENTARY

TERRY GREEN & MARK FILBOTTE

The 3.0percent ($370k) increase in the budget proposed by the town doesn't cover required annual increases of 6-7percent just to maintain contractual obligations and infrastructure.

Dr Walsh and the Cohasset School principals have presented the 2007 School Budget, requesting a total of $13,791,366 representing an 11.7 percent increase over 2006. As Cohasset residents consider the impact to the overall town budget, we encourage them to gain an understanding of the components of the School budget, the direction it takes toward restoring our school curriculum and the responsible approach taken by Dr Walsh and her team in setting a direction for the future.

At its core the budget is responding to quantifiable realities:

- Student enrollment has increased 22percent over the past 10 years.
- In September, there will be an additional 38 students enrolled in Kindergarten.
- Nearly 75percent of the total school budget is tied to our existing salaries.

The 3.0percent ($370k) increase in the budget proposed by the town doesn't cover required annual increases of 6-7percent just to maintain contractual obligations and infrastructure. Opening the doors in September with less than this could result in staffing cuts.

If the proposed budget is approved Cohasset will begin addressing some of the identified gaps:

- An English/reading teacher at the middle school in response to concerns over the reading progress of our students.
- Adjustment counselor at the middle/high school to increase student support services.
- Additions to science, technology and engineering programs at the middle school to commensurate with MCAS requirements.
- Math and English teachers at the high school providing a reduction of class sizes.
- Expand foreign language and music at the middle-high school.
- A shared physical education/health teacher between the Osgood and Deer Hill schools to restore physical education to twice week and health once a week at Osgood.
- Osgood School would add two Kindergarten teachers and one second-grade teacher (in response to increasing enrollment).
- Funds for the purchase of Advance Placement textbooks at the High School vs. charging participating students.

Proposed class sizes would be as follows:

- Kindergarten - avg. class size of 17.5
- Grade 2 - avg. class size of 19.7
- Grade 3 - avg. class size of 20.2
- Grade 4 - avg. class size of 22.4
- Grade 5 - avg. class size of 23
- Grade 6-12 avg. class size under 30

YES another override may be needed to support Cohasset's quality school system. Dr. Walsh's team has done an admirable job creating a "bottoms up" budget that applies the resources where most needed across the school district. Unfortunately, the failure of an override last year makes this year's school budget more critical.

Without the proposed budget increase, the programs and staffing highlighted above cannot be implemented. Failure to support the school budget this year will unfortunately result in increased class sizes, a reduction in core programming and an inevitable decline in the quality of Cohasset's schools.

Terry Green and Mark Flibotte are co-chairs, Committee To Support Cohasset Schools.

Gourmet chili, pizza

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I like chili, as long as it doesn't burn the roof of my mouth off.

The best chili I ever had was at the Alamo, a Mexican restaurant on 47th Street in Manhattan run by a Swede named Axel. I liked it because I was able to eat a whole plate of chili with rice and beans without calling for help from Station 5.

Once I took Dave, a friend who grew up in San Antonio, to lunch with me at the Alamo and he sneered at my favorite dish. "Kansas chili!" he cried with all the disdain of a man who expected filet mignon and got ground chuck hamburger.

There are three kinds of chili, he explained. "Mexican chili" gives you third degree burns of the alimentary canal. "Texas chili" causes you to drink great quantities of cold beer, one swig for each spoonful. "Kansas chili" is for wimps.

I don't recall if I ever lunched with Dave again.

I don't know how pizza took its first step up the food chain...

Later, I had a housekeeper from Guatemala who couldn't understand why I wanted her to cook chili with beans for supper occasionally since everybody knew that the only folks who ate it were Indians who were too poor to buy real food.

The hottest chili peppers were added to the mix, she said, because sometimes the meat was a little green with age around the edges and that burning sensation was enough to kill the taste, not to mention your taste buds.

I bring this up because I note that Lydia Shire, one of the premiere chefs in Boston, is planning to open a gourmet pizzeria in the North End, which seems to me a little like selling Kansas chili at a cantina in Chihuahua.

I don't know how pizza took its first step up the food chain but I can imagine a destitute paisano of long ago gathering his bambinos around him, rolling out a flat hunk of leftover dough and dousing it with tomato sauce and cheese for a cheap evening meal.

Lydia has shown us what she was in mind for her gourmet pizzeria since she is already well known for the lobster pizza she has whipped up for patrons of her previous Italian restaurants, Biba and Pignoli.

Maybe a gourmet pizzeria in the North End will elevate that humble food to a level where, like lobster, it can be sold at Raffael's for "market value," which means "we're not going to tell you how much it is until you've finished eating."

Lobster got its start that way. The early settlers thought of the succulent crustaceans as something that got in the way of real fish, like cod and eels. In some cases, they slopped them to the hogs.

"The most use that I made of them in five years after I came there was but to bait my hook to catch bass, I had been so cloyed with them the first day I went ashore," wrote Tom Morton, the man from Merrymount, in his memoirs.

Prior to the 18th century, according to Linda Greenlaw in her "Lobster Chronicles," there were laws in some parts of New England forbidding prisons to serve lobster to inmates more than once a week.

To do so would be "cruel and unusual punishment."

COMMENTARY

ANDREW QUIGLEY

With all due respect to Peter Pratt, his comment in last week's Mariner that the owner of the 1811 House is being "pushed from pillar to post unfairly (my emphasis) in this building, he has neither by law changes nor zoning relief," has to rate as one of the most ridiculous statements ever uttered by a public official in this town.

According to the Mariner article, the 1811 owner "would like to build a three story building behind the 1811 building that will have retail or office space on the first floor, six apartments on the second floor, and six apartments on the third floor." According to the article, the 1811 property presently has two apartments on the second floor and two commercial spaces on the first floor. I should note that the Mariner reporter refers to this proposal as "an upgrade" of the existing structure, a euphemistic use of language if there ever was one.

So, unless I'm missing something, the situation is this: somebody bought a building downtown that has a total of four rental units (two commercial and two residential) and has decided that he now wants to build a new, three-story structure behind it with at least two more commercial spaces and 12 more residential units – which apparently is not allowed under present zoning – and there is something "unfair" about his inability to do so? Is Mr. Pratt suggesting that anytime someone wants to do something outside of the zoning by-laws, then the town should change the by-law to permit the new use?

But it is not merely the mischaracterization of this proposal, whether by Mr. Pratt or the newspaper, that is the problem. Far more disturbing is the apparent desire by the Planning Board and the Economic Growth and Development Committee (EGDC) to willy-nilly recommend dramatic changes to our zoning by-laws which will change the face of Cohasset, both in the village and along Route 3A, without anything resembling due consideration.

According to the article, the EGDC has been meeting "since October to come up with ideas to boost commercial tax revenue in Cohasset." That's all of about three months – and perhaps a handful of meetings – and they are proposing these drastic zoning changes? Moreover, a board known as the Zoning Advisory Committee (ZAC) apparently has been defunct for some time and never has been consulted by either the EGDC or the Planning Bd. – but now it will be hastily assembled to consider the new zoning changes in time for Town Meeting? Shouldn't the ZAC have been involved from the start, rather than at the end, of the process?

One cannot read last week's newspaper article without coming to the conclusion that these zoning changes are being brought forward not because of a well-documented need for our town, as determined by town officials after appropriate study and consultation with experts to develop a comprehensive zoning plan, but rather by the desires of developers who are eager to get moving with their single-minded projects.

Moreover, the contradictions by the board members in their own words are the best arguments against recommending these zoning changes at this time. After Mr. Pratt's statements in favor of certain multi-unit housing proposals, he then says, just a few paragraphs later, that he wants to sunset the senior multi-family residence overlay district (SMROD), "because we need to get control of the multi-family developments." So on the one hand, Mr. Pratt and others say they want to stop multi-family developments under the existing zoning laws — but then they want new zoning by-laws to permit more multi-family construction? It makes no sense at all and is contradictory on its face.

I also would ask this question of our Planning Bd and the EGDC: prior to considering these zoning proposals for the village and the area of the new train station, have they hired a consultant to advise them as to how other towns have handled these matters and what the specific ramifications will be for Cohasset?

The Planning Bd. has a proven bad track record when it comes to large-scale zoning changes. The board brought us the SMROD (that it now wants to "sunset," another euphemism), even though it is evident that it had no idea what it was doing because it did not talk to experts in the field of affordable senior housing before recommending the SMROD to Town Meeting. It was not until three years after the by-law was passed that the town hired a consultant to explain how this sort of housing works. Three years after the fact, we have learned that our SMROD, the highlight of which ostensibly was to provide affordable housing for Cohasset's senior citizens, will benefit absolutely no one in Cohasset because they do not qualify for this type of senior housing. (Instead, we have the Cedarmere project that is selling town homes in the $900,000s.) And now, three years after we went along with this zoning change, the same Planning Bd. that brought us the SMROD (it was their article at the November 2002 Town Meeting) is now telling us, in essence, "Oops, sorry folks, we should dump this by-law because we're losing control of multi-family developments."

Similarly, it should be clear to everybody that there is nobody on the Planning Bd or the EGDRC who has the expertise to draw up the zoning changes being contemplated for our village and the area of the train station. It also should be clear that there has been no consideration by these boards of the ramifications of these dramatic zoning changes. By no means am I a real estate developer, but anyone with half a brain should realize that if a zoning change of the magnitude that will permit the 1811 owner to go forward with his project is pushed through Town Meeting, there is not one inch of land in our village which would make economic sense to be retained as it is. Every building would be subject to an "upgrade" that would intensify its use by the same four-fold degree as is being proposed for the 1811 property. That may be a good thing or a bad thing, but we need a lot more time, due consideration, straightforward discussion (without the euphemisms and mischaracterizations), and an understanding of what we're getting ourselves into before we undertake such dramatic change. The owner of the 1811 building may have a vision for his property, but who is putting forth the vision for the village and what is it? If the 1811 owner can construct 12 new apartment units on his property, how many more apartment units can we expect will be built in the village?

Moreover, it is incomprehensible that these boards are ignoring the Avalon Bay project. Until it is determined whether the Avalon Bay project is going to go forward, there should be a moratorium on any zoning changes which would allow for construction of more residential rental units in Cohasset. If Avalon's 250 apartments (which alone will increase the number of dwelling units in Cohasset by 10 percent) become a reality, can anyone seriously suggest that Cohasset should encourage the development of more rental housing?

I'm all in favor of trying to expand our commercial tax base. But let's make sure that when we do it, we have all of the facts beforehand from people who are experts in the field, so that when we come to Town Meeting to vote on these things, we will know that what we are doing will be in the best interests of the town, not just a few special interests. But as things stand now, the Great Cohasset Land Rush of 2006 is in full swing, being aided and abetted by town officials who are willing to sacrifice the fabric of our community on the altars of "economic development" and so-called "senior housing."

If these boards intend to bring these zoning changes forward at this time, then here's my "vision" for my one acre of land which is in close proximity to the village: I would like to construct a 10-story apartment building of about 50 units, for seniors only, which will increase foot traffic for the benefit of our downtown businesses. To Peter and all of the other members of the Planning Bd. and EGDC, I assume I can count on your support for "by law changes or zoning relief."

Similarly, I expect an editorial from the Mariner praising me for "thinking outside the box" to enhance the economic value of my property (to quote yet another euphemistic phrase used in the Mariner editorial).

FROM FLU, PAGE 12

The effectiveness of a vaccine depends, amongst other things, on the percentage of the population which has received it and is still within the period of protection offered by that vaccine. Vaccinated people act as a sort of "firebreak" in the spread of the disease, slowing or preventing the further transmission of the disease to others. Since the protection offered by vaccines is rarely 100 percent, the vaccine will be more effective if more people have been vaccinated. The disease may be able to jump from one unvaccinated person to another who has not been vaccinated, but is unlikely able to jump to another who has been vaccinated. Studies of these characteristics have found that when a certain percentage of a population is vaccinated, the spread of the disease is effectively stopped. This critical percentage depends on the disease and the vaccine, but 90 percent is not uncommon. This condition is called herd immunity — the fact that others in the herd or population have been vaccinated provides protection to all others, whether or not vaccinated themselves. It is therefore the general aim of those involved in public health to establish herd immunity in the populations for which they are responsible to ensure the success of their campaigns.

Vaccination is a way of life for toddlers which on average receive more than 15 separate shots for a dozen diseases before the age of 2, and controversy can arise regarding the efficacy of a vaccine, because some scientists and parents contend that the vaccine might be linked to the development of a number of conditions, such as autism, Crohn's disease (a bowel disorder), and the brain disorder Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD).

During the 1980s and 1990s, a number of lawsuits were brought in the United States against manufacturers of vaccines, alleging the vaccines had caused a variety of physical and mental disorders in children. While these were inconclusive, they did lead to a massive jump in the costs of certain vaccines.

Actually, loss of faith in some vaccination programs and the consequent reduction of the percentage of those vaccinated below a critical level, has seriously damaged immunization programs in several countries. For example, as the result of publication in a British medical journal of erroneous information, later retracted, about the Measles/Mumps/Rubella vaccine, the takeup of MMR dropped sharply, from 92 percent in 1996 to 84 percent in 2002. In some parts of London, it was said to be as low as 60 percent — far below the rate thought to be needed to avoid an epidemic of measles. Although an epidemic has not yet occurred, measles rates have risen and doctors have warned of a future epidemic, because of the failure of the protection offered by herd immunity.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: BHRC records local representatives' votes on four roll calls and local senators' votes on one roll call from the week of January 16-20.

PRIMARY ENFORCEMENT OF SEAT BELT LAW (H 229)

House 77-74 and then 76-74, approved a bill providing for "primary enforcement" of the state's seat belt law. The measure had been defeated by the House three times since 2000. A switch to a "No" vote by any one legislator who voted "Yes" on the second roll call would have resulted in a tie vote and defeat of the bill. The proposal allows police officers to stop and issue $25 tickets to a driver and passengers solely for not wearing seat belts. Current law permits only secondary enforcement and prohibits the $25 fine from being imposed unless the driver is stopped for another motor vehicle violation or some other offense. The legislation prohibits police officers from searching the vehicle, its contents, the driver or passengers solely because of the seat belt violation. It also leaves intact the current law that bans the offense from being considered a moving violation that would be used to impose a surcharge on the driver. Supporters said that the state already requires use of seat belts and the bill simply increases the level of enforcement. They argued that secondary enforcement is not working well and noted that more than one-third of Bay State residents are still not buckling up while the national average is only 18 percent noncompliance. They said that the bill would increase seat belt use, save lives, prevent serious injuries and save more than $160 million in annual medical and other costs. Opponents said that the bill is another example of "Big Brother" invading people's private lives and cars and argued that drivers and passengers should have the freedom to decide whether they want to wear seat belts. They argued that passage of this bill is a slippery slope and asked if supporters intend to act in the name of protecting people by banning junk food, fast food and others things that are bad for them. Others noted that this vague new power is tantamount to establishing roadblocks and would lead to random stops and unfair racial profiling. A review of the bill by Beacon Hill Roll Call found a provision that allows backseat passengers who are not wearing a seat belt to be fined only if the driver or front-seat passengers are not buckled up. This means that if the driver and front-seat passengers are wearing seat belts, unbuckled passengers in the back seat would not be fined. (On both roll call votes, a "Yes" vote is for primary enforcement of the seat belt law. A "No" vote is against primary enforcement).

PRIMARY ENFORCEMENT FOR UNDER AGE 22 (H 229)

House 9-141, rejected an amendment making the seat belt law a primary enforcement one for drivers under the age of 22 and a secondary enforcement one for drivers over 22. The amendment allows police officers to stop and issue tickets to a driver under 22 solely for not wearing a seat belt. Officers would be allowed to impose the $25 fine on drivers over 22 only if the vehicle is stopped for another motor vehicle violation or some other offense. Amendment supporters said that this education approach is a good one that would help younger people get into the habit of buckling up by being tougher with them until the age of 22. Amendment opponents said that the amendment is misguided because the current problem is that adults, not children, are the ones who are not using seat belts. (A "Yes" vote is for the "age 22" amendment. A "No" vote is against it).

UPHOLD SPEAKER'S RULING ON JURIES AND SEAT BELTS (H 229)

House 131-20, upheld the speaker's ruling prohibiting consideration of an amendment allowing juries that assess fault and damages in automobile accident cases to consider whether drivers and passengers were wearing their seat belts. Supporters of the speaker's ruling said that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the basic seat belt bill and should not be allowed for consideration. Opponents of the speaker's ruling said that the amendment is clearly related to seat belt use and should be debated. They noted that current practice prohibits the jury from considering seat belt use and said this prohibition is unfair and inconsistent because the law requires seat belt use. (A "Yes" vote is for the speaker's ruling prohibiting consideration of the amendment. A "No" vote is against the speaker's ruling and favors allowing consideration of the amendment).

MEETINGS OF MUNICIPAL BOARDS (H 4489)

Senate 37-0, approved a local option bill allowing local communities to permit members of city and town boards to vote on a matter despite the fact that they have missed one or more of the hearings related to it. The measure allows these members to vote if they examine all the evidence that was submitted at the missed hearing including audio or video tapes of the proceedings. Supporters said that a 1983 court ruling prohibits members of these boards from counting as part of a quorum and voting on an important matter if they missed even one meeting. They noted that this lack of a quorum often results in the board's legal inability to act and requires the entire lengthy hearing process to begin from scratch. The House has already approved a different version of the bill. The Senate version now goes to the House for consideration. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill).

Lot-size issue may go to TM nection with a commercial use on the first floor of the structure. The 2003 bylaw also extended to dwellings the parking requirement exemption for commercial parcels in the village section of the downtown business district provided that a project is within 500 feet of the Town Parking Lot.

"But 5.3.1 [40,000 square feet] prevents anyone from even applying," Sawchuk told the ZAC this week.

It's not clear why the 2003 bylaw does not supercede other restrictions such as the 40,000 square foot requirement. To resolve this problem, under consideration are two articles for the Town Meeting warrant relating to the village, town planner Liz Harrington explained.

The first would create a new downtown business village district, so bylaw changes meant for the village would not affect other downtown business districts that include West Corner (near DiNero's); a section in Beechwood (by the ballpark); and a small area at the harbor (near the American Legion). The second article would reach for some of the dimensional issues that include the minimum 40,000-square-foot requirement; the question of whether lot size should be tied to the number of units (for example, 5,000 square feet to begin with "x" number of square ,feet needed for each additional unit; and possible elimination of the front-yard setback consistent with historic patterns to encourage development and redevelopment along the sidewalk (that could be installed along the "front" of the shops that back up to the municipal parking lot).

Mark DeGiacomo, a former long-time zoning board member who sits on the ZAC, said the board needed to think about the bylaw amendment's effect on other village properties. He said the amendment might encourage teardowns and would make village property much more valuable. "How much do we want to do in the village district?" he asked.

ZAC member Peter Pratt, who is on the planning board, said the village has not measurably changed in his lifetime. He said the building facades needed to be preserved and suggested a comprehensive bylaw might have to be crafted that is more discretionary-based. He speculated without restrictions a developer could come in and knock down the old post office block at the corner of Depot Court and South Main Street.

Zoning board member Ben Lacy, who also sits on the ZAC, is concerned about parking requirements for residential units and noted the town parking lot cannot absorb unlimited residential parking. He suggested a project provide one space per bedroom.

Sawchuk said he could not currently meet that requirement and said his research shows half the seniors, who would live in his project, would not have cars.

ZAC chairman Al Moore, who is also chairman of the planning board, said – while enthusiastic about the Sawchuk project — the committee needed to consider "unintended consequences" of any bylaw change. Moore said the issue may require more time.

But Sawchuk pointed out that the timing for his project is critical with the village revitalization project set to begin in the spring. The MBTA is also going to be reconstructing the town parking lot and Sawchuk plans to create a brick sidewalk along the back of the 1811 building lot next to the curbing the MBTA will install.

Moore said the project has received broad-based support. "But the bylaw has to be drafted in a form not to let all the horses out of the barn," he said, adding the question was whether the bylaw could be nailed down in time for Town Meeting.

3A parking

The ZAC reached a consensus this week to limit changes to the town's parking requirements for commercial properties to the proposed TOD (Transit Oriented District) adjacent to the Greenbush station.

Currently the bylaw requires one space per 100 square feet of commercial building; the change would allow one space per 200 square feet.

The economic development committee is recommending relaxing the parking bylaw to encourage more commercial development along the state highway and grow the town's commercial tax base.

But ZAC chairman Al Moore said while everyone agrees the current parking requirement is excessive, he noted the planning board usually forgives some of that requirement and uses that as leverage to get a developer to provide more green space and increase setbacks, for example.

"If you want to change parking in the whole area (Rte. 3A)," Moore said, "It's chances of passing Town Meeting are slim to none and slim is on a fast horse riding out of town."

Moore said reduced parking restrictions in the TOD would "provide us a laboratory to see how it works." The proposed TOD is a separate article that includes reducing the parking requirements in TOD zoning overlay district.

Also under consideration by the ZAC is an article to sunset the Senior Multi-unit Overlay Residential District, dubbed SMORD, and to strengthen the large home site plan review bylaw.

Pratt said with Cook, Cedarmere and Avalon on the horizon, the time for large, multi-unit projects in town is coming to a close. Pratt said "it makes perfect sense to sunset the bylaw now but allow Cook to move forward."

He explained that the 15 percent multi-unit dwelling cap in the SMORD is not legally reached until building permits are pulled for Avalon, Cook and Cedarmere. And as is the case with Cedarmere, not all building permits are pulled all at once.

"Irrespective of the fact that the 'pipeline' now contains almost 400 units, another SMORD application could come into Town Hall today, given that we have not reached the 15 percent threshold as the bylaw defines," Pratt explained Wednesday. A multi-family unit is any structure with three or more units; there are roughly 200-250 units in town today; 15 percent of the total housing units in town would be 435-450 units.

Pratt said Cohasset remains an attractive enough marketplace for other "mega" projects.

The ZAC has asked Town Counsel to see if there are any legal issues regarding sunsetting the SMORD but carving out the Cook project so that can go forward, Pratt said.

The ZAC also plans to consider an article that would put more "teeth" in the large home site review bylaw.

Time to make hay

Skaters need wins in a hurry if they are to make tourney

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

For the second straight year, the Cohasset High hockey team enters the home stretch of its schedule facing an uphill battle to qualify for the Division 3 state tournament.

Last season, the Skippers fought back to put themselves in a position where their season finale against Norwell was for a postseason berth. If they are to do something similar this season, they need wins, fast.

Cohasset's critical stretch starts tonight with an 8 p.m. face-off at Pilgrim, when they host South Shore League foe Harwich-Provincetown. HP dismantled Cohasset by a 10-3 score in Orleans on Jan. 4 and, needless to say, the Skippers will need to play a lot better.

"[Tonight] is a big game," said head coach Ben Virga. "We're 4-6-2 right now, and we have some tough games to end the year. We need to make hay with these next few."

The Skippers improved to that record with Wednesday night's 7-4 win over Carver-Sacred Heart in Bridgewater. Mark Bouchard and Chris Davis led the offense with two goals each, as Brian Straughn, Charlie Czerkawski and Pat Doonan all scored once.

For Czerkawski, it was the first goal of his high school career, and came off a great feed by Alex Goetz from behind the net.

Lady hoopsters back in business

Three straight wins put CHS girls in contention for postseason berth

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

Any way you look at it, one word sums up the Cohasset girls basketball team: unpredictable. And we wouldn't want it any other way.

At the beginning of last week, the Lady Skippers hoped for anything better than the week before. After back-to-back losses against Carver and Harwich, the confidence meter began to plummet a few notches.

Don't throw in the towel yet; the Skippers certainly did not. Instead of dwelling on the defeats, the girls made up their minds that enough is enough. As the Hull team strolled into the Cohasset gym on Tuesday the 17th, the Skippers realized it was now or never in terms of bouncing back. With a new pep in their step, the home team lit up the court.

Head coach John Levangie did his best to convince his team not to surrender. Apparently, they listened.

From the opening tip-off, the Skippers controlled the situation. Junior Lacey Richardson tallied 12 points, while freshman Gabriella Flibotte contributed 15. Cohasset's fast pace and athleticism distanced them from the bewildered Pirates.

Defensively, the Skippers held down the fort like pros. Senior captains Mia Lieb-Lappen and Chelsea Grossman, along with freshmen Sam Lehr, dominated the boards. Not convinced yet? Cohasset's press left the Pirates cowering in their boots.

"Our press really kept the pressure on them [Hull]," said Lieb-Lappen. "They panicked, and we took advantage of the opportunities."

After a rough week before, this 47-20 win was just what "Doctor" Levangie ordered. The players felt much better.

With the wind at their backs, the Skippers prepared for another challenge: on the road Norwell. With the Clippers ranking second in the South Shore League and the game on their home court, most fans would give Norwell the edge in this contest.

What an unforgettable game! As the first half came to a close, the Norwell team swaggered off the court, leaving the Skippers in the dust with a 17-point lead. At this point, some fans began to wonder if the earlier game against Hull would prove yet another false hope for the Skippers.

Head coach John Levangie did his best to convince his team not to surrender. Apparently, they listened.

Starting immediately in the second half, the Skippers left the Norwell squad with their jaws on the ground in astonishment.

Norwell fans buried their heads as Flibotte racked up 19 of her 25 points in the second half. Drawing fouls like there was no tomorrow, Flibotte went 7-of-8 at the free throw line.

The rest of the team caught the Flibotte fever. Lehr put in 14 points and tore down 15 rebounds to register an impressive double-double. Grossman and Lieb-Lappen threw down nine points each. As the final buzzer sounded, the 44 final half Skipper points sank the Clipper ship by a score of 62-54.

"Our shot selection definitely made a difference in this one," said Flibotte. "Everyone drove more and our offense was generally more aggressive. Looking for these inside shots really helped us."

Defensively speaking, the Skipper press locked up the Norwell offense in the second half, clearing the way for Cohasset's miraculous comeback.

The next day in practice, Levangie gave the girls a short and snappy speech about their performance. "I have one thing to say: Wow!"

Now 7-4 after Tuesday's 59-32 rout of Mashpee, the Skippers are back in business. Cohasset played Avon last night after the Mariner went to press, and travel to Abington on Tuesday.

Sci-Coh swimmers form an unbeatable force

By Caitlin Donovan
CORRESPONDENT

In the beginning of the season, Sci-Coh swim team coach Jon Fortin said one of his main goals for the season was to get the Scituate swimmers and the Cohasset swimmers to form one team.

They have done that, and more.

The combination of Scituate and Cohasset swimmers on one team has produced an unbeatable force with a record of 4-1 so far. Captain Maura Whalen said the team's work ethic has been its biggest key to success.

"Hard practices and determined athletes translates into the pool with the best times and team wins," she said.

The attitude of the team is extremely positive and optimistic, and they carry that over into their meets where they cheer on their teammates and express fantastic sportsmanship towards the opposition.

So far this team has had an amazing season, with only one loss to Duxbury. The talent this team brings to the swimming pool is phenomenal. Each and every swimmer shows heart and determination at every practice and meet.

Members of the Sci-Coh Swim Team who have qualified for the State Sectionals include: James Smith, 100-yard backstroke; Mamme Daley, 100-yard butterfly; Alison Costa, 100-yard butterfly; Caitlin Little, 100-yard freestyle; and Emily Mulcahy, 500-yard freestyle.

The team has been dominant in its four wins. Their intensity this season will be remembered for seasons to come.

Another tough meet for Coh-Noh gymnasts

Cohasset senior Lisa Spirito during her floor exercise routine on Tuesday against Marshfield. The Coh-Noh gymnasts got back on the winning track with a convincing victory over the Rams that night.

By Rachel Thomas
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team competed in another difficult tri-meet this past Saturday, as the opposing two teams were Attleboro and the 2004 state champions, Barnstable.

The outcome of the meet gave Barnstable a victory, finishing with a total score of 140, followed by Attleboro with a 132.3 and Coh-Noh, scoring a 123.5.

"It was a hard meet, and the two other teams showed to be extremely tough competition," said coach Amy Maree.

Although the team was facing exceptionally well-rounded teams, which was an intimidating factor, the Coh-Noh gymnasts performed quite well.

Maree said the team's best event was the floor exercise. All-around competitor and team co-captain Erin Kelly scored a remarkable 8.8, followed by C.J. Himberg, who obtained an 8.3. Lisa Spirito, who also competed all four events, scored an 8.1, as did junior Melissa Murphy.

Himberg and Spirito also performed very well on beam, as they earned scores of 8.0 and 7.6, respectively, on a difficult event. Many other gymnasts scored in the high 7's on many events, such as Cohasset junior Corinna Durham's mark of 7.8 on the vault.

"It was a hard meet, and the two other teams showed to be extremely tough competition."
Coach Amy Maree

"Corinna did very well in the meet also, and I was very impressed with her vault score," Maree said.

Also, Norwell's Melissa Murphy performed a noteworthy bar routine, which earned her a score of 7.7, the team's highest score in that event. Murphy has proven herself to be a valuable asset to the team with her strong talent and consistent performances.

Although the team suffered a tough loss against the two teams on Saturday, the gymnasts bounced back with a convincing win over Marshfield on Tuesday; details to come in next week's Mariner.

GIRLS TRAVEL BASKETBALL

8th graders stand at 6-2

The 8th grade girls hoop team suffered its first loss of the season in a thrilling but heartbreaking 35-32 double overtime game at Norwell on Saturday, Jan. 7.

It was a close, hard-fought battle throughout until Norwell took an eight point lead with a little over three minutes remaining in the contest. Cohasset called a timeout, regrouped and came out in a very aggressive man-to-man defense. The constant pressure caused numerous turnovers and the girls were able to score 12 points in the next three minutes to only two for Norwell.

With a two point lead with eight seconds to go and possession of the ball, it appeared that Cohasset would cap its remarkable comeback with a victory. However, Norwell was able to tie up the ball and with the possession arrow in their favor, got the ball back. An errant Norwell shot with two seconds was rebounded on the opposite side of the basket and put back up to tie the score as time ran out.

In the first OT, the teams traded free throws and in the second OT, Norwell scored a couple of quick baskets to win. Cohasset was led in scoring by Tori Lehr with 11 points, Lindsey Allard with eight, and Isabelle Franklin with six.

The girls rebounded the next day with a win over Hull to improve their season record to 5-1 and a share of the league lead. Cohasset led by double digits for most of the second half until Hull hit a couple of meaningless, late three-pointers to make the final score 31-23. Meredith Kelly led a balanced scoring effort with 10 points. All 10 Blue & White girls contributed to the win with good ball movement and aggressive defense.

On the 14th, the Super Eights traveled to Hanson to play a game for sole possession of the league lead, as both teams entered the contest with identical 5-1 records. Cohasset didn't play their best game and lost 27-15. It was by far the lowest point total for the Super Eights this year. Defensively the effort was strong, but the girls just could not get anything going offensively. Hanson is a strong team, but Cohasset looks forward to a February rematch at home.

On the 15th, the Blue & White girls rebounded with a convincing 29-8 win over inter-divisional big-school rival Scituate. Strong rebounding by Lucy Noble and aggressive defensive work by Hannah Burgess and Mimi Mahoney allowed Cohasset to pull away in the second half as Scituate only scored two points after the break.

The team was led in scoring by Allard with nine points, Franklin and Kelly with seven, and Samantha Crough, who chipped in with three points.

Double dip for Seven-Ups

The 7th grade girls suffered their first double-loss weekend of the season, dropping a 25-19 contest to a first-place Hanson team on Jan. 14 and then a 28-14 decision the next day to big-school opponent Scituate.

Kate French, moving from her usual wing position to take over the pivot spot, turned in one of the best performances of her travel basketball career against Hanson. Kate did it all at both ends of the court, playing strong defense, anchoring the rebounding effort, and scoring on a variety of mid-range jumpers, strong moves to the hoop, and free throws, as Cohasset grabbed a 14-13 lead at the intermission.

Also playing her best game of the season was forward Emma Musto, who scored four points and was strong under the boards. Carly Martin also put forth a strong effort on defense and in the rebounding department.

The Seven-Ups continued to maintain their slim edge until about the midpoint of the second half when Hanson scored two quick buckets in succession to take a 21-18 lead. The Cohasset girls saw many of their shots, notably by Lindsay Davis and a pair of trey attempts by Emma Quigley, fall in-and-out, as they attempted to come back. However, a free throw by Rachel Fredey would prove to be the last Cohasset point of the night in a well-played, but ultimately frustrating effort.

On the 15th, the Cohasset Sevens once again played well, but hot shooting by Scituate proved to be the difference. Although trailing by 16 points at the midpoint of the second half, the Seven-Ups refused to give up and mounted a bit of a comeback effort with a man-to-man, pressure defense which resulted in six quick points to trim the Scituate margin to 24-14. However, the comeback bid proved to be too little, too late and the visitors from our south held on for the victory.

Carli Haggerty and French had four points each for Cohasset, with Davis and Musto netting a bucket apiece and Martin sinking a pair of free throws.

6th graders improving

The 6th grade girls travel team tipped off against Norwell on Saturday, Jan. 7.

Cohasset's tight zone defense forced outside shooting, but Norwell answered, taking an 8-0 lead with 10 minutes remaining in the half. However, Cohasset fast breaks by Christie Fitzgerald and Anna Seraikis created scoring opportunities and trips to the foul line. A jumper from the foul line by Seraikis put Cohasset on the board with a halftime score of 12-2.

Defensive rebounds by Jenn Mullin set up scoring in the second half. Allie Farren and Watson Lieffel dropped in baskets, bringing the score to 18-6. All alone on a Norwell fastbreak, Olivia Franklin drew an offensive foul. Steals by Cohasset guards and aggressive play by Sage Stebbins set up scoring by Mullin and Seraikis, but Norwell took home the win, 22-10.

The Blue & White hosted Hull on Sunday, Jan. 8, in a hard-fought defensive battle. Early in the game, Mullin drew shooting fouls, but few shots went up from the floor for either side. Drives to the basket by Seraikis evened the score at 5-5. Aggressive play by Isabel Robinson, Franklin, Stebbins, Tedeschi, and Lieffel kept the Hull team in check.

With minutes left in the contest, Fitzgerald sank two foul shots on separate trips to the charity stripe, bringing the score to 7-7. Hull hit the front end of a one-and-one to take an 8-7 lead. Seraikis answered with a basket pulling Cohasset in front 9-8. A foul brought Hull to the line where the Hull girl sank two, making the score 10-9 in Hull's favor. A final trip to the line by Cohasset was unsuccessful and the game ended with the 6th graders being the third Cohasset team to lose by a single point that day.

With only seven players for the following long weekend's games, the Sixers faced a 12-person Hanson squad on Saturday and the first place team in the large school division, Scituate, at home on Sunday.

Against Hanson, Lieffel put in the team's first basket and a hoop by Seraikis put Cohasset out front 4-1. A series of quick foul calls on Robinson increased the pressure on the Cohasset squad, but guards Stebbins and Franklin did a great job helping out at the forward position. Hanson attempted to take the lead, but a hoop by Seraikis on a fast break assist from Lieffel kept Cohasset in the lead 6-5.

On a great assist by Franklin, Robinson scored bringing the tally to 10-8 Cohasset. A basket off an offensive rebound by Fitzgerald evened the score again 11-11. In the final minutes of the half, Hanson put in two quick baskets, setting the half time mark at 15-11.

A fatigued Sixer squad took the floor in the second half, but was not able to respond to Hanson's pressure defense. Mullin established her territory under the hoop, scooping defensive rebounds, but the team could not get their shots to fall. Hanson put in 22 unanswered points. The Cohasset squad added just one from the foul line, ending this exhausting contest at 37-12.

The next day, the Sixers faced first-place Scituate at home. The Scituate team is the best team we have seen thus far, with well-coached, patient, and very athletic players. Cohasset put in a good performance, especially on defense, holding Scituate in the first half.

Mullin and Lieffel were strong under the basket on defense. Guards Stebbins, Seraikis, and Fitzgerald and forwards Franklin and Robinson made Scituate work hard for every point. Cohasset moved the ball around well and played a very controlled game against the seasoned Scituate squad. Scituate won the contest 29-5.

BOYS TRAVEL BASKETBALL

Cohasset Boys win over Weymouth

While many sports fans were begrudgingly watching Pittsburgh demolish Denver in the AFC Championship game, the boys travel hoop squads provided great action and excitement at the Abigail Adams Middle School in Weymouth.

Late Sunday afternoon, the 6th graders took to the court, matching up well against Weymouth. It was a tough, aggressive game from start to finish. Robbie Mahoney owned the paint on both ends of the court for Cohasset, getting second and third shot chances and converting points from the foul line.

Trailing towards the end of the first half, Christian Allard masterfully stole the ball on the Eagle trap and layed up a bunny for two and was fouled. He sunk the bucket and his team led 24-23 at the end of the first half.

Determined and focused, the sixers started the second half. Jay Salerno knocked down a sweet shot from the corner. Things looked good. But in the blink of an eye, and a few turnovers later, Weymouth took the lead. Strong, tough defense and great ball movement by Patrick MacCormack, Patrick Kearney, Charlie Neaves, Morgan McCarthy and Chris Lunde helped the boys in blue. Kearney got the action going with a great steal and feed to Allard for two.

And that was the name of the game for the final eight minutes. Great defensive positioning created turnovers and the fastbreak got Cohasset on top. Mahoney fed MacCormack for two, Kearney hit from the corner, Allard fed Mahoney and so on. Cohasset's fast break wore Weymouth down. Strong drives to the hoop created foul shot opportunities and whether it was Allard, Mahoney or Salerno, those points helped put Cohasset on top for the win.

The 7th graders came out strong, winning the tip and Robert Jones scored the first bucket of the game. He also scored the second bucket of the game on a fastbreak from a Ben Campbell steal. He also scored the third bucket of the game. Weymouth didn't score for the first three minutes of the game.

Cohasset easily controlled the tempo for most of the game. Kelby Pontes, Eric Wasel and Gabe Seksay dominated inside the key offensively and defensively, creating point scoring situations. The sevens played their trademark brand of hoop, with accurate passing, strong rebounding and and fast break scoring. Mike Monaco and Ben Campbell found the big men underneath the hoop. Justin Liburd, Sam Richardson and Alex Harper brought tremendous speed and agility onto the floor.

But the game wasn't over. Weymouth fought back with a barrage of 3-point shots and strong pressing to bring the game to within two points of Cohasset. The boys in blue held on to win the game.

The 8th graders played the last game of the night. Goose eggs were on the board until Robbie McCunney stole the ball and scored at the 12-minute mark. It was a defensive battle. Cohasset transitioned well, feeding McCunney for another bucket, but Weymouth was tallying point for point, and took a brief lead, until Kevin O'Connell hit a serious 3-pointer. The lead went back and forth and at the break Weymouth was up by two.

The second half showcased a ferocious and aggressive Cohasset squad. The tag team of McCunney and Johnny Maher put Cohasset up 24-20 and the boys in blue didn't look back. John Kearney, Brendan Doonan, Jeff Charles and Will Wise mixed it up well on the perimeter, keeping the ball out of Weymouth's hands. Their man-to-man defense was strong and these boys came up with most every loose ball. Dana Valentine had good positioning in the paint. Taylor MacQuade, with his trademark turnaround jumper gave Cohasset a 30-23 lead.

MacQuade also delivered a resounding blocked shot on the other end of the court that prevented a Weymouth score. Cohasset won, 42-34.

Editor's Note: The following report, from games played Jan. 14 and 15, was omitted from last week's edition due to space constraints. It is running in full this week.

Great hoop action took place in both Pembroke and Cohasset as the middle school travel basketball teams had a winning weekend on Jan. 14 and 15, with a combined 5-1 record.

On the 14th, the squads were in Pembroke. The 6th graders played first and came out looking confident. The game plan was simple: play your position and execute. The sixers began strong and stayed strong. The offense was evenly spread out, leading to an early 11-0 run. Pembroke battled back, down by two at the half.

The second half began as the first, as the sixers dominated again. Danny Barnes, Chris Lunde, Patrick Kearney and Charlie Neaves ignited the defense with their quick hands and feet, keeping the Pembroke offense frazzled. Jay Salerno and Jamie Faber rebounded strongly, protecting the paint. Pat MacCormack, Christian Allard and Robbie Mahoney provided the offensive spark with timely and accurate shooting.

Coach Salerno commented, "As solid as our offense was, it was the defense that won the game." The full court press, mixed up with the "Eagle" trap, kept Pembroke confused. The "steal and go" defensive effort put the boys in blue on top for the win.

The 7th graders hit the wood next. The Pembroke 7's, perhaps learning from their own sixers, came out aggressively, building to a commanding 18-8 lead. Pembroke played very strong, passing the ball well and shooting well. Despite a buzzer beating 3-pointer by Ben Campbell, Cohasset was down 23-15 at the half.

After the break, Cohasset chipped away at the Pembroke lead, ignited by a tremendous blocked shot by K.J Pontes. Pontes, Robert Jones and Campbell then rallied their teammates and their shots started to drop, and their defense started to undermine the Pembroke offense.

The boys pulled to within four, 35-31 Pembroke. They were battling back. Gabe Seksay tied the game by grabbing a fastbreak rebound and dropping in a sweet inside the paint jumper.

Sam Richardson put his team on top, sinking one of two foul shots, but that was the first and only lead they would enjoy. Pembroke clawed their way back with scrappy defense and good shooting. Jack Carrier, Mike Monaco, Derek Youngman and Justin Liburd played well for Cohasset.

The 8's took to the floor next, looking for their first win. Coach Campbell had simple instructions for his team: "No turnovers and keep your heads in the game." With that in mind, Cohasset won the tip. It was a defensive battle early on, but Cohasset found the net. Aggressive defensive created offensive opportunities. Dana Valentine and Brendan Doonan forced Pembroke turnovers that became Cohasset points. A buzzer beating 3-pointer from mid court by Johnny Maher put Cohasset on top 20-14.

Robbie McCunney, Will Wise and John Kearney kept the ball on the offensive side of the court, diving on any and every loose ball. They were hungry. Good team passing and shot selection kept Cohasset on top 27-18. Coming off the bench, Dan 'Sully' Sullivan was strong in the paint, creating second chance shots and getting to the line.

The Cohasset defense confused Pembroke, leading to turnovers. Cohasset stayed on top. Jeff Charles and Kevin O'Connell ran the Philly offense and kept the ball away from Pembroke. Taylor MacQuade was a tower in the paint. The 8's earned their first win of the season, 40-28.

The temperature dropped on Sunday the 15th, but the intensity didn't for the boys travel teams as Hanson visited CMHS gym.

The sixers, as usual started the action, feeling pretty good coming off the prior day's win. Coach Salerno commented, "Again, it was a great team effort. The boys dug in and executed." Faber was explosive on offense contributing 14 points. Playing time was spread out with timely rotations keeping fresh legs on the court. Every player contributed to the win.

The sevens, looking to rebound from a tough loss in Pembroke, came ready to play. Youngman got the action going, stealing the ball on the press getting it to Robert Jones for the first points of the game. Hanson was physically bigger than Cohasset, so the boys relied on their speed to overcome the size advantage held by Hanson.

Cohasset played solid team defense and had great offensive ball movement. Jones and Pontes were on fire, with shots sinking left and right. At the half, Cohasset was up 20-18. The boys in blue maintained their lead throughout the second half. Great team passing from Sam Richardson and Jack Carrier kept the ball in Cohasset's hands. Time ran out and Cohasset won 40-35.

The 8th graders took to the pine next. What ensued for the first four minutes was a defensive battle until McCunney scored the first points of the game, ending the scoring drought, nailing two buckets. And then Hanson scored. It was a rough and tumble first half, with lots of fouls, turnovers and bodies on the floor.

McCunney kept his team in the game with his quick, defensive hands, creating offensive opportunities. On a fast break, JoDi Rosano was deliberately fouled, and sank one of two shots, extending Cohasset's lead to 13-6. Great team passing and heady up court handling pushed Cohasset's lead beyond the reach of Hanson.

MacQuade, Valentine, Doonan, Sullivan and Maher were all strong under the basket, while Rosano, Kearney, Wise and Charles controlled the ball. Cohasset won, 31-15.

FROM HOCKEY, PAGE 17

Cohasset was looking to avenge a poorly played 3-3 tie on Dec. 28 against the same team. After a so-so first period - after which the Skippers had a 2-1 lead - the team came out blazing in the second, outscoring the home team 5-0. The six-goal lead at the second intermission allowed Virga to rest his regulars for a good part of the third period.

While the offense was on point, Virga also praised his defensemen for their efforts. The Skippers were playing without their top blue-liner, Conor Holway, who is nursing a hip injury. Brandon Smith moved back to defense after playing the last several games as a winger, and was one of several kids who played well.

Virga said the entire group of defensmen played well, including Corbin Faber, Dan Sullivan, Frank Wheelwright, Ben Masotta, Melissa Crowley-Buck and Ian Lyster. Goalies Jonny Wade and Brendan Barrett split the action in net for Cohasset.

"All the defensemen did a really good job," Virga said. "It was nice to get everybody some good ice time."

The new first line of Bouchard, Doonan and center Austin Lanzillotti did a nice job of moving the puck and creating good scoring opportunities, Virga said. forwards Andrew Smith and RK Quebec both played solid games.

The Carver-SH game kicked off a stretch of six consecutive league games against teams that Cohasset has already played once this season. The Skippers' record in that first go-round the league: 2-2-2. Following that are matinees against South Shore Voc-Tech, Pembroke and Westwood, against whom the Skippers are 1-2 this year.

"It will be interesting to see if lessons have been learned from those games," Virga said. "That's going to make or break our season."

COASTAL STARS

Pee Wee C1

Looking for their 10th win in a row, the Stars Pee Wee C-1 team took to the ice to take on a ready Westwood team looking for an upset and got one in a 7-3 win. Charlie Coffman got the Stars up 1–0 early in the first period making a great move around a Westwood defender but Westwood was quick to retaliate with a score of their own.

Jamie Faber got the Stars back in the lead with a beautiful roof shot that the goalie never saw coming but once again Westwood was quick to score again and it looked like the Stars were going to have their hands full. Nick Craig on defense kept the puck in the Westwood zone keeping the pressure on and when the Westwood goalie went down after a save, Tucker Welch was quick to capitalize on the loose puck and flip it up into the net.

With the exception of one more Westwood goal in the second it was all Stars after that. Tucker and Jamie each had another goal in the second period and Coffman added another to his tally and Brandon Terrio kept the pressure on and managed to drain a goal of his own.

This was a whole team effort. Kevin Quinn, the Stars goalie, was a force and has been all season but was all over the puck against a desperate Westwood squad battling back. Defense was phenomenal and very physical to combat Westwood who were more than "chippy".

Ellie Leong, Sean Keneally, Craig and our latest defensive standout, Willie Brown kept the puck out of our zone to let our hustling forwards make plays and score goals. Lastly, our forwards hustled to they dropped, made great passes and kept the momentum on the Stars end.

Whether it was Joe Kiley winning a number of face-offs, Brian Craig putting on the jets, Kevin Friedland's quick thinking, Evan Yeager's tenacity or Sara Evan's smart and patient play, all contributed to an outstanding effort and win.

Although Westwood was quick and strong, they were simply outplayed. Congratulations to the Stars C-1 team as they continue to march closer to first place in the Yankee conference.

Cohasset's Vo-Tech graduates continue to excel

By Pam Titus
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Elyse Portanova, a 2004 Vo-Tech graduate, is currently a first year student at Rensellaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., studying electrical engineering.

Kristen James, a 2005 Vo-Tech graduate, is a sophomore computer science major at Fitchburg State College.

It's probably one of the best-kept secrets in town — Cohasset has two high schools.

For decades, Cohasset has belonged to the South Shore Regional School District, which governs the South Shore Vocational Technical High School in Hanover. This 600-student public school, which accepts students from the towns of Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hanson, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate, Whitman, has made its mark in graduating students prepared to succeed in whatever the next chapter of their lives brings, whether it be college, further training, or the workforce.

Vo-Tech maintains the mission of providing two educational avenues for students in one integrated high school experience. One educational path pushes students to technical excellence in 14 career areas including electronics, drafting, health careers, computer information technology, automotive, carpentry, graphic communications, auto body, culinary arts, cosmetology, precision machine technology, metal fabrication and welding, heating, ventilation, air conditioning and refrigeration, and carpentry. Students who complete the technical coursework receive a technical performance certificate, proving competency in a trade.

The parallel educational path is an academic course of study that addresses the requirements of the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System, or MCAS test, and builds skills for post-secondary education. The work completed earns students a regular high school diploma.

"Students who attend South Shore receive a first rate integrated curriculum from dedicated teachers. These academic experiences will continue to help students meet current and future MCAS demands," said Tom Hickey, director of curriculum and instruction. In fact, 100 percent of Vo-Tech students in the class of 2005 passed the MCAS tests in English and mathematics.

Taking a closer look at Vo-Tech graduates, it is clear to see they are thriving in the next phases of their academic careers. Cohasset residents Kristen James of the class of 2004 and Elyse Portanova of the class of 2005 both graduated from the school's electronic engineering program and are continuing to build on that foundation. Portanova is currently a first year student at Rensellaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., studying electrical engineering. James is a sophomore computer science major at Fitchburg State College.

While James admits when she enrolled at Vo-Tech she had anticipated pursuing an education in the field of cosmetology, she changed her mind during the "exploratory" portion of her first year.

Vo-Tech places all incoming ninth grade students in an exploratory program which allows them to visit eight of the school's 14 programs for two weeks each during the first half of the school year, thereby allowing them to experience all the school has to offer before settling on an educational path. The exploratory program allows students to see a wide range of programs, so when they finally choose a program in the middle of ninth grade, it is based on the hands-on experiences that occurred during exploratory.

For James, being exposed to electronics gave her the opportunity to pursue a career path she may not have otherwise chosen.

Students at Vo-Tech spend nearly four consecutive years with either one or two vocational instructors. Portanova said that led to a very positive experience, as that kind of constant interaction "creates a bond between the teacher and the students, and it allows you to learn a lot from them."

Beyond the classroom, Portanova said she has fond memories of the drama club, which "became like a family," over the course of preparing for their annual springtime productions. She added classroom teachers play a big part in encouraging students to take on extra-curricular activities.

Both James and Portanova say the experiences they had at Vo-Tech, coupled with the college coursework they are currently completing, have fully prepared them to enter the workforce. James said not only did she feel academically prepared upon graduation, but she had been taught skills such as business plan writing, résumé preparation, how to write compelling college essays, and how to work in groups.

Vo-Tech offers a Tech Prep (technical preparation) program which is designed to provide the level of coursework necessary to help those students who have a high level of technical competence advance into higher education programs. Many Tech Prep students from Vo-Tech are awarded college credit at local area schools based on their performance in their vocational studies while in high school.

James took advantage of the Tech Prep program, and the experience has encouraged her to accept Fitchburg State College's invitation to participate in a leadership studies program — which in essence is a second major — that includes courses in the humanities and political science.

Vo-Tech is preparing to accept applications for the incoming class of 2010, and James hopes it won't be a secret to Cohasset eighth graders and their parents. Just because the school is not in Cohasset, James said, "don't let that stop you. It was one of the best experiences ever."

Pam Titus is director of pupil services at Vo-Tech. For more information on Vo-Tech, please visit its Web site at www.ssvotech.org.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Whew! First semester is finished

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTOPHER PESCATORE

Tickets were sold all week during lunch, so if you failed to buy one and wish to go to what should be a terrific dance, you are out of luck because tickets will not be sold at the door.

We are finished with the first semester here at the High School, and it feels wonderful to be over and done with final tests and projects. We encountered our first significant snowfall of the year this past Monday, but ironically, the ski team race that was scheduled for Monday was cancelled, go figure. But, as I said, the term is over finally, and the grueling work that the seniors have put in over their High School careers should take a steady decline in the second semester.

The Junior-Senior Semi-Formal dance is this Saturday at Atlantica. Tickets were sold all week during lunch, so if you failed to buy one and wish to go to what should be a terrific dance, you are out of luck because tickets WILL NOT be sold at the door. I am rather pleased with the news in the High School this week, albeit a bit dull, it is really important so here we go.

• First semester grades for seniors will be mailed out to colleges next week.

• Seniors are being offered new courses for the second semester: Study Hall, Peer Tutor, and Music Theory.

• The Social Awareness Organization will be visiting Father Bill's in February, if you are interested in participating or helping out in any way, contact Mr. Scott Newkirk at the High School.

• The Middle School is experiencing a heating problem; every classroom is either extremely hot or extremely cold, there is no middle ground of delightfulness.

• Sign-ups for after school intramural activities in the Middle School are underway and students can sign up for over ten different programs.

• The debate team is red hot and has debated their way to an astounding season so far. They won their debate last week, 10-2.

• The National Honor Society will have met on Thursday during lunch to discuss the status of their organization and any progress that has been made for juniors and seniors alike.

• The following students have received rave reviews by their advisors for their community service work and will be receiving outstanding grades as a reward for their excellence: Emilie Shea at the Wellspring Social Services Agency in Hull. Carrie Muir, Erin Liddell, Ellen Tarpey, Jessica Wheelwright, Katrina Reardon, and Nikki Dugan at the Osgood Elementary School. Katherine Whoriskey and Christie Muir at the South Shore Nursery. School. Caitlin Sanchez and Katie DeWaal at the South Shore Art Center. Jess Hinman at the Deer Hill School working with Mrs. Berman.

• The Varsity Swim Team will have competed against Duxbury High School on Tuesday. This meet will have probably determined the Girls and Boys League Championships.

• It's not too soon to start working on Summer Institute Research Projects. Students interested in working on a project this summer to study the pollution that enters James Brook which then empties into Cohasset Harbor, need to attend some evening training classes being held at CSCR. The classes will train students in all of the skills needed to assist the town in completing this project. Ten classes are planned, beginning March 1st, and will be held on Wednesday nights from 7:15-9 pm. This is the Watershed Academy.

• The Boys Varsity Wrestling will compete in a quad meet vs. Rockland, Marshfield, and North Quincy on Friday.

There you have it, news again presented in a timely fashion for your reading pleasure. The term may be finished, but that doesn't mean that I am finished reporting the news to you, I will return for the second semester to share with you my knowledge of riveting events taking place in the High School week after week. Don't forget that the junior-senior semi is tomorrow, and if you get your hands on a Mariner before lunch on Friday, then you can still purchase a ticket for it, otherwise it is too late and you have missed out. So, until next week, I bid you adieu.

Garage dance

There will be a Dance at the Garage on Friday, Feb. 10, from 7 to 10 p.m. for all sixth through eighth graders.

Registrations being taken for Computer Camp

South Shore Computer Camp will be held the week of July 10 through July 14 at Hingham High School from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. The camp is co-educational for boys and girls ages 7 to 14. Campers will rotate between interactive technology classes in the computer labs and outside sports activities such as tennis and basketball. Campers receive individualized and small group instruction based on age, skill level, and interests.

Hingham High School guidance counselor Mark Awdycki, and business and technology teacher Steven George, will co-direct the camp. Awdycki, who has held previous leadership positions at specialty camps and in various summer programs, has a background in professional sports, having worked in media and public relations for the Boston Bruins and Boston Red Sox. Prior to teaching, George worked in technology and software development for 10 years.

Classes will be differentiated based on ability, aptitude and interests so campers can learn new skills or reinforce previously learned skills. Internet safety for kids will also be addressed and discussed by a local law enforcement agency representative. Outside sports activities will involve instruction and games in tennis and basketball with emphasis on fundamentals, sportsmanship and teamwork.

Some computer applications campers can choose from include MS Office, Macromedia Dreamweaver, Fireworks, Flash, and Adobe Photoshop. Advanced concepts will be clustered around web design, graphic-image editing and creation, and web animation. At the end of the program, students will receive a CD of their projects.

Tuition is $259, $239 if paid in full by April 1. Campers will be responsible for bringing their own lunch. Space is limited. For more information or a registration form visit www.southshore-computercamp.com.

Religious traditions series continues at Glastonbury Abbey

This seventh annual series of "Listening to Other Voices" has the theme of "Religion and the World We Live In." The title was motivated by the abundance of news items that were defined or interpreted by a religious perspective, from the Tsunami to stem cell research, from war to political elections, from creationism to end of life issues. Although religion can be polarizing among people, this year's speakers have found it to be inspirational in shaping their life's work and its potential to draw people together. The series will include presentations by speakers representing the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Buddhist and Muslim traditions. Each of us is asked to listen to these voices in dialogue with our own particular religious tradition.

This series continues on the following dates at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey Conference Center, 16 Hull St..

The remainder of the series includes:

- Dr. Mohammad Dadrass and Westy Egmont — Feb. 16 — "One Nation? Under God."
- Tania Leontov — April 6 — "The Common Heart, and Inter-Religious Dialogue Lasting 21 Years."
- Margaret O'Brien Steinfels — May 4 — "Catholic Culture and American Culture."

IT'S HAPPENING

The new weathervane, created by Steve Bobo, is a copper replica of a Colonial Pinky.

Reception planned for weathervane unveiling

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold a reception to celebrate the unveiling of its newly-completed weathervane on Sunday, Feb. 5, from 2 to 4 p.m., at the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., Cohasset. After a short program, light refreshments will be served.

The vane, a copper replica of a Colonial Pinky, was created by Steve Bobo, an artistic and creative builder of boats, large and small. It is modeled after the post revolutionary war schooner, "Fame," a privateer, built in Essex, and used in the War of 1812. Once installed on the cupola of the Pratt Building, it will serve as a visible reminder of Cohasset's maritime past.

Concerto competition, awards party, Jan. 29

On Sunday, Jan. 29, Hingham Symphony sponsors its own star search among the best young professional musicians in the Boston area.

HSO's first annual Bay State Concerto Competition invites musicians aged 18 to 30 to apply to participate in two rounds of competition. On Saturday, Jan 28, the judges will narrow the field to a maximum of eight finalists. These eight will move on to compete in front of a live audience in Hingham on Jan. 29.

"Special projects such as the concerto competition are a vital part of the diverse programming that HSO provides to the community," says music director Jin Kim. "Whether it be taking musicians into bars, senior centers or small concert halls, these events provide not only a wonderful opportunity for listeners, but also for musicians to grow as professionals."

Each finalist will perform part of a concerto (a composition for orchestra and one or more solo instruments, typically in three movements), accompanied by a pianist. Depending on the results of the preliminaries, these soloists could be performing on any instrument — strings, brass, woodwinds, piano or even percussion. The winner receives $1000 and the opportunity to perform the concerto with the full HSO at Masterworks Encore in March. Second and third place finishers receive cash prizes, and one musician will win the Audience Choice award. Cash prizes are generously sponsored by Watch All, Inc.

Immediately after the competition, the audience is invited to join in an Awards Party, hosted by m3 (music, martinis & more), HSO's newest group of supporters, and sponsored by Cherrywood Barbeque. While the judges deliberate, nosh on authentic New Orleans BBQ treats, beer and wine. Meet the musicians and toast the winners!

Tickets at $10 include the m3 Awards party (cash bar). Available in advance at Hingham Library, La Petite Maison and Nobles, Hingham Square, Buttonwood Books, Cohasset, call 781-740-5694, or go to: www.hinghamsymphony.org.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

IS DIABETES RELATED TO HEARING LOSS!

Hearing loss occurs early during the course of uncontrolled Type I diabetes in children, say researchers. The culprit may be diabetic damage to nerves or blood vessels. This finding is based on a study of 63 children below age 18 who had a confirmed diagnosis of Type I diabetes. The children had the disease for an average of 5 years at the time of the study. Hearing assessments showed that all the children had some degree of hearing loss, but one-third of them had a loss of more than 25 decibels, which indicates functional impairment. Hearing loss was predominantly in the middle and high frequencies, which can affect speech discrimination. Tighter diabetes control might prevent or delay this complication.

Research continues to work toward enhancing the quality of life of the hearing impaired, from scientific studies to the creation of today's hearing instrument marvels. We'd like to do our part by providing you with a free hearing test and the most advanced, comfortable, dependable instruments on the market today. At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we can help with acoustic appraisal of your hearing ability, discussion of the listening devices available, and follow-up care and service of your hearing aid. You can reach us at 781-337-1144, 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. You can also visit us on the web at www.familyhearing.net.

P.S. It should be stressed that the children in the above-mentioned study had diabetes that was poorly controlled.

DESTINATIONS

Sweet escapes

By KIM FOLEY MACKINNON
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

While candy, roses, cards and the like are the staples of Valen-tine's Day, they disappear pretty quickly. As the years go by, one gift after another can blur into a vague memory of Valentines past. One way to make sure your Valentine doesn't forget this particular year is to spirit him or her out of town for a romantic getaway. Often packages offered at hotels and inns include all the fixings for a special night. All you have to do is show up prepared to be charming and to enjoy yourself.

The seaside off-season holds an allure that's particularly hard to beat: wind whipping through your hair while walking on the beach, holding one another close for warmth, the desolate dunes begging for you to make up an ode on the spot -- OK, maybe that's a stretch, but still, there is something compelling about the water. There are plenty of enticing places close to Boston that are perfect for igniting your amour.

For a true getaway, head to Nantucket for a great Valentine's deal at the Martin House Inn. This property was built by Captain Nathaniel Sherman in 1803 for his bride, Hepsabeth. The winter rates are almost half off regular season (your love interest does not need to know!). You'll get a bottle of champagne upon arrival and there's a wine and cheese reception if you come on a Friday. Complimentary afternoon tea is served on Saturday, and on top of that you'll get a $100 gift certificate for dinner at the nearby Centre Street Bistro. Make sure to ask for a room with a fireplace. Prices start at $360. While on the island, visit the renovated Whaling Museum and check out the scrimshaw collection, where you can look at work that sailors did at sea while pining for their loved ones. Very romantic!

For those who can't spare the time to take an island retreat but love the Cape, Falmouth offers many charms, and getting there is a snap. The Inn on the Square is offering an $89 package on Valentine's Day only, which includes a bottle of champagne. The inn is close to the Village Green and shops and, in addition to being near the ocean, it has an indoor heated pool.

If you prefer your water frozen, not lapping at your feet, book a night at The Charles Hotel in Cambridge. Last year, the hotel decided to build an ice rink in its courtyard, and it has brought it back this year, affording lovers the perfect opportunity to skate hand in hand. Two packages hold romantic appeal. "Room & Blades" includes a night in a deluxe guest room, valet parking, skate rentals and ice-skating for two, plus a room service breakfast in bed. Rates start at $269. To take it to another level, "A Love Story" package includes a three-course dinner for two at Rialto (at the hotel), transportation around Harvard Square in an authentic 1977 diesel-run London Taxi, a bottle of sparkling wine and chocolates, plus an Origins Ginger Float Cream Bubble Bath. This package starts at $399, and while it doesn't include ice-skating, rentals and skating cost just $5 each.

To the north, the Emerson Inn by the Sea in Rockport offers stunning views of the ocean. While the 36-room inn bustles in the summertime, it has a more relaxed pace in the winter. Each room is unique, some with canopy beds, others with hot tubs right in the room. Room 305 is particularly charming, according to a staff member who would know. And while Ralph Waldo Emerson did indeed stay at the property, his room is not particularly romantic, so don't reserve it (unless history really turns you on). In Rockport proper, many of the shops open in the summer are closed, but there are a few that stay open, and without the tourist crowds the shopkeepers are more than willing to chat for a while. The Emerson offers a Valentine's package that includes two nights' accommodation, continental breakfast, welcome gift and dinner for two on Feb. 11 or 14 in the hotel's Grand Cafe. Rates start at $344.

The Harbor Light Inn in Marblehead is another charming option. Located in the heart of the Old Town, it's close to the harbor, shops, galleries and restaurants; however, you may not want to leave the premises once you settle in. Several rooms have both fireplaces and two-person hot tubs. On weekends, a two-night stay is required, plenty of time to relax. A deluxe breakfast buffet is included, plus cookies and cider every afternoon. On the weekend before Valentine's, a bottle of champagne also is included. Prices start at $315.

South of Boston, indulge in some pampering at The Hotel Providence, Rhode Island's only member of the prestigious Small Luxury Hotels of the World. While the hotel might not be on the water, the Valentine's package takes on the theme with its "Passion" bath and body amenities that can be taken advantage of in a hot tub built for two. You also get a suite, an "aphrodisiac" platter served in your room, flower petal turndown and breakfast buffet at L'Epicureo in the hotel. The package is $475.

A tip for would-be Cupids longing to head out of town, but who are on a budget: All the above hotels offer cut-rate deals during the winter. If you decide against a package, book a night that works for you and bring your own amenities. Arrive early before your date and decorate with fresh flowers, iced champagne you've brought yourself, or greet your lover with a bubble bath. This year can be the romantic getaway that won't be forgotten.

Students offered healthy lunches

And more kids lining up to buy

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

No soda. No ice cream. No unhealthy eating habits during school hours. That's the goal Director of Food Services Bob Levy has set for the Cohasset public schools dining program, and it is paying off in a number of ways.

Every four years the Department of Education audits Cohasset's food services program for nutritional content to ensure it meets state guidelines. This year, the school department can proudly say it passed with flying colors.

"We were very prepared for them to come out and we did very well in all areas," Levy said.

Cohasset runs its own food services program, but that was not always the case. For 15 years, Cohasset relied on Chartwells Educational Dining Services, a company that provides food service to more than 500 school districts in the United States, serving more than 1.5 million meals daily.

"We're far beyond most school districts and cities in the commonwealth."
— Bob Levy, food services director

However, when the Chartwells contract expired at the end of the school year in June 2003, former Supt. of Schools Edward Malvey made the decision to bring food services in-house and try to increase profits. Levy, who had previously worked for Chartwells, stayed on as a private employee for the schools and has transformed the way

Luckily the storm's high winds came a few hours after the highest tide of the year that caused flooding in the usual spots around town including Margin Street by Stockbridge Road, part of Atlantic Avenue, and Jerusalem Road at Bow Street. After two hours the streets were passable again, police said.

Area near Greenbush station eyed for proposed new bylaw

Would create Transit Oriented District

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Turn the clock ahead a few years and imagine a vibrant mixed-use district surrounding the new Greenbush train station – one that might bring in some badly needed tax revenue for the town.

Voters at the April 1 annual Town Meeting could have the chance to set the stage for just such a place – by establishing a Transit Oriented District or TOD through an article proposed by the Economic Development Committee, whose charge in part is to explore strategies to reduce the town's reliance on residential taxes.

The Cohasset Zoning Advisory Committee is looking at the wording of the TOD and several other articles that will be discussed at a planning board public hearing Wed., Feb. 22 at which citizens are encouraged to attend and ask questions. The planning board will then decide whether to recommend the articles to Town Meeting.

In addition to the TOD, other zoning articles on the table include reducing the lot-size requirement in the village for mixed-use retail and residential; reducing the parking requirements for commercial space along Rte. 3A that could encourage more development; and "sunsetting" the Senior Multi-unit Residential Overlay District, dubbed SMROD, while still allowing the Cook Estate senior housing project to move forward.

Proponents of the TOD say with Greenbush train service due to resume in mid-2007, it is an opportune time to establish the

Staffing drives police budget

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The fiscal 2007 Town Manager's recommended budget does not have the funds available to meet the requests of every department. While Town Manager Bill Griffin said he has done his best to prioritize, he knows there are areas that need funding which the town simply cannot supply while staying within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2.

Police Chief James Hussey came before the board of selectmen Tuesday, Jan. 24 to explain his departmental requests. Of major concern is the amount of officers currently on staff. Hussey said without a full police force, it is causing an increase in overtime costs and officers are getting tired. Hussey said he worries Cohasset will continue the trend of not being able to retain its officers on a long-term basis if it does not start offering a more attractive package.

Hussey said currently, there are 18 positions on the police department, including his, and one of those positions is occupied by an officer who is currently in the police academy and will join the force full time upon completion of the program in April. To be fully staffed, there should be 20 total department members. Three of the current positions — the prosecutor, detective, and Sgt. Detective — are used as support staff, providing communication with the elderly and schools, investigating crimes, writing grants, and representing the department at meetings.

"They are not always going to be in town. They don't get used as part of minimum manning," he said.

The contract the department has with the police union requires there be a minimum of three officers on each shift on duty in town. However, Hussey said the department has trouble keeping its positions full, which leads to overtime costs. "We never have since I've been here," he said, adding there have been injuries, retirements, and one officer returned to the town which had previously laid him off. Another officer left to go to a larger department where there was more opportunity, which Hussey said could be indicative of the challenges facing the department in the future.

"I've replaced two of our losses with lateral transfers so they didn't need training. But finding people off the civil service list is tough. We have hired one and we have him in the academy" but the department pays for him to attend, he said. In addition, Hussey said there will be another retirement coming within the next six months and the town must prepare for it. "Those are some of the things we're up against," he said.

Hussey's budget asks for one position back that was lost last year. He said during the night shift, he would like to be able to have one person on patrol near Rte. 3A, another on patrol near the shore, and keep one officer at the station.

Selectman Rob Spofford asked Hussey if he had looked into the possibility of having permanent intermittent officers. Hussey said there is $10,000 budgeted for permanent intermittent officers, but the department won't necessarily have someone it can count on. Permanent intermittent officers

Selectmen to meet on Wed., Feb. 15

Next week's selectmen's meeting has changed again. While the board had scheduled its meeting for Feb. 13 in light of Valentine's Day on the 14th, the 13th posed a conflict with the violence prevention meeting being held at the schools with Dr. Robert Macy, director of community services for the trauma center in Boston. Therefore, the board of selectmen will meet Wednesday, Feb. 15 at 7 p.m.

Fusco adds excitement to the school board race

Steve Fusco

Lee Jenkins

Pam Wilson

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A three-way race for the school committee is shaping up as Surry Drive resident Steven Fusco has pulled papers to fill one of two open seats on the board. This will be his first time seeking a position in elected office.

Fusco, who is the vice president of technology for Fidelity Strategic Investments, is also chairman of the planning and technology sub-committee of the school department's strategic planning committee. He and his wife and their two children have lived in Cohasset since 2000, and he said he is looking forward to restoring academic excellence in town as a member of the board.

"I believe it is our collective responsibility as a town to provide our children with an excellent education. We simply need to do a better job. With proper planning and strategic vision, I feel strongly we can make annual overrides a thing of the past," he said in a press release announcing his intent to run.

Fusco believes the town has some difficult challenges to overcome, including the impact of proposed housing developments, teachers' union contract negotiations, and a continued slide in the MCAS ranking. "I plan to better utilize technology to enhance communications with Cohasset residents to make sure everyone has the most timely and accurate information possible. As a member of the school committee, I plan to do what is best for the children of Cohasset while respecting the needs of the taxpayers. Like many people in town, I am both a parent and a taxpayer," he said.

Also in the race are Leonora "Lee" Jenkins, of 198 Jerusalem Road, and incumbent Pam Wilson of 80 N. Main St. Jenkins narrowly lost to Wilson in last year's school committee race for a one-year, unexpired term on the school committee. The two seats currently open are both for three-year terms.

"As a member of the school committee, I plan to do what is best for the children of Cohasset while respecting the needs of the taxpayers."

— Steve Fusco, candidate

Residents have until Feb. 16 to pull papers for elected office, which means there is still plenty of time to add to the excitement. So far, the board of selectmen has two interested candidates in Roger Q. Hill of 19A Highland Avenue and Edwin G. "Ted" Carr of 88 S. Main St. The two are vying for selectman Michael Sullivan's seat. Sullivan is not seeking reelection.

In addition to Wilson, the following incumbents have pulled nomination papers indicating their interest in seeking reelection: planning board member Peter Pratt; water commissioner John McNabb; sewer commissioner John Beck; Peggy Chapman of the board of health; Lisa LoJacono for recreation commission; and assessor Michael C. Patrolia.

There are three seats available on the Board of Library Trustees. Incumbents Patience Towle and Agnes McCann have pulled papers, as has Elizabeth Baker, who would be seeking her first term. Library trustee Carol Riley has indicated she won't seek another term.

There is one open five-year seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority and incumbent John Muncey will not seek reelection.

Nomination papers for the 2006 annual Town Election are available at the Town Clerk's Office at Town Hall. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, Feb. 16.

In order to hold an elected office, a potential candidate must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that a person is not running for office until he or she takes out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies the signatures collected on the nomination papers. Positions available for the 2006 town election include:

- Selectmen - One for three years
- School Committee - Two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - Three for three years
- Assessor - One for three years
- Board of Health - One for three years
- Cohasset Housing Authority - One for five years
- Planning Board - One for five years
- Recreation Commission - One for five years
- Sewer Commission - One for three years
- Water Commission - One for three years

Friday, March 10 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting to be held on Saturday, April 1, and for the Annual Town Election to be held on Saturday, April 8.

overlay district. With an overlay district, the underlying zoning remains in tact. Therefore, parcels incorporated in the TOD would not lose their status as light industry (on the north side of 3A) or highway technology (on the south side of 3A) but would have the TOD as an alternative set of standards for development.

The TOD could include retail establishments such as restaurants, dry cleaners and beauty shops; business offices; community facilities; and one- and/or two-bedroom dwelling units with some affordable housing.

The proposed Cohasset TOD bylaw is based largely on the state model. The TOD is the central theme of Gov. Mitt Romney's "Smart Growth" initiative and establishing one could help Cohasset qualify for state grants.

At the Zoning Advisory Committee meeting Monday, Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road, said while she is not opposed to the concept, she suggested the proposed TOD bylaw should be postponed to allow it to be more fully vetted. ZAC member Mark DeGiacomo echoed her comments, asking proponents if they could wait until the fall Special Town Meeting.

"Why not provide a prudent zoning by-law that will guide new and better property developments at the northern gateway to the town?"

— Peter L. Brown, Economic Development Committee

But Walter Sullivan, an attorney working with the new owners of the five-acre property that abuts the train station, said the concept is fully vetted and has been used successfully nationally and in other Massachusetts towns, such as Concord. "Don't look at this as not vetted," he said. "This just didn't happen overnight."

In a interview Wednesday, Peter L. Brown, chairman of the Economic Development Committee, said the timing to establish a TOD is right.

"It is a concept whose time has come to Cohasset," Brown said. "The commuter train and station is a reality. Why not provide a prudent zoning by-law that will guide new and better property developments at the northern gateway to the town?

"The proximity to the train station allows for higher density developments thereby reducing on-site parking, creating more pedestrian friendly site plans and a unique opportunity for a new mixed-use development whose site plan is fully integrated with the station," Brown said. "With the higher density, it would also create a higher property value and thereby higher commercial and business tax revenues for the town than would otherwise not occur in a light industrial development."

Geoffrey E. Wolf of Connell Real Estate & Development Co. whose affiliate Connell Cohasset Greenbush LLC now owns the former Davenport site that includes the building that houses Mary Lou's News and Aveni Cleaners, and the area behind that includes a florist/greenhouse and a boatyard, said the MBTA is rapidly moving forward and could open the Cohasset transit station in mid -2007.

"The most significant reason we hope the TOD article can be acted on at this April's Town Meeting is to comply with the MBTA's construction schedule," Wolf said in an interview Wednesday. "Our intention is to develop an attractive retail center and zoning permitting, potentially a limited number of one- and two-bedroom apartments.

"In keeping with the MBTA's and the Governor's support of transit-oriented development, we intend to include two pedestrian walkways connecting the site to the walkway/bikepath leading to the train platform," he said "In addition, we are in discussions with the MBTA to incorporate a vehicular connection from the property into the MBTA parking lot, allowing for mutuality of access from 3A and minimization of additional curb cuts, in keeping with the Town's stated desires."

Other parcels on the north side of 3A that could become part of the TOD include the Barnes property which is less than two-acres and houses JJ's and the 3A carpet store; the roughly 2-acre Alco Oil property that includes an office building; the train station itself; and across 3A, the Frank Williams landscaping site that is about 10 acres, according to Building Commissioner Bob Egan.

Planning Board member Peter Pratt said, as now contemplated, the TOD would create the need for a special permit issued by the Planning Board should a developer choose to seek to build under TOD provisions.

"If the TOD concept passes Town Meeting, the Planning Board's mission would be to call together all the possible direct and abutting property owners to call for coordinated planning," he said. "The key components in such a coordinated effort are: traffic access points, traffic control signals, sidewalks and affiliated pedestrian access points and overall traffic and parking flow/control planning."

Threats have no effect on dance

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Some details of the threatening note found at the middle-high school have been released, due to the nature of the content and its correlation to an upcoming school event.

The note, found Tuesday, Jan. 24 at 11:45 a.m., made reference to "student behaviors" at school dances. The junior/senior semi formal was scheduled for Saturday, Jan. 28 at Atlantica, which caused school administrators some concern.

In a message sent Wednesday, Jan. 25 via the Connect-Ed pre-recorded telephone messaging system, middle-high school Principal Joel Antolini said, "I share with you that within the threat that was found yesterday, there was a reference to student behaviors at dances. While this reference was general in nature, it causes me to have a heightened sense of concern for the safety of all individuals at the junior/senior semi-formal." He added it was up to the parents of each student to make the decision as to whether they felt comfortable having their son or daughter attend. Antolini also informed parents the time of the dance was changed from 8 to 11 p.m. to 7:30 to 10 p.m.

"There were five parent chaperones plus a teacher, and school administrators. There was also a police detail present, along with Chief Hussey."

— Principal Joel Antolini

"The dance was well attended, with more participants than last year. The students seemed to have a good time. There were five parent chaperones plus a teacher, and school administrators. There was also a police detail present, along with Chief Hussey. All in all, it was a nice evening for the students," said Antolini Monday.

New harbormaster search underway

The town has received a total of 18 résumés for the harbormaster position being vacated by John Muncey. Town Manager Bill Griffin requested the harbor committee review the résumés and narrow the field down to approximately five semi-finalists. The committee recommended six candidates and Griffin said he added a seventh candidate who had missed the application deadline due to being on active duty in the military.

Griffin said he has asked selectman Rob Spofford, Police Chief Jim Hussey, director of finance Michael Buckley, and Dick Avery to serve on the interview team. "I wanted an interview team that would bring knowledge of boating, law enforcement, and management, but at the same time be neutral toward the candidates themselves," said Griffin in a memo to the board of selectmen.

The semi-finalists will be interviewing over the next two weeks. The field will then be narrowed down to two or three finalists who will be brought in for a second interview. At that point, with the input of the selection team, Griffin will make the selection.

Override could be just a matter of time

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The school department and the town are not seeing eye-to-eye on the amounts they are recommending for the fiscal 2007 school budget.

A joint budget meeting between the school department, selectmen and advisory committee was scheduled for last night (Thursday, Feb. 2) after the Mariner went to press. The boards were expected to discuss the school budget from both the town and school angles.

Town Manager Bill Griffin's recommended school budget would increase the bottom line by 3 percent to ensure it stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 — the state law which caps the amount a municipality can increase its tax levy from year to year. At the same time, at its Thursday, Jan. 26 meeting, the school committee decided it would come to last night's meeting with the intention to inform Griffin it would consider taking a 5 percent increase as its balanced-budget figure and that it would not rule out the possibility of going for at least a $1 million override.

Under the Town Manager Act, Griffin is required to present a balanced budget to Town Meeting. If the town and the school department cannot agree on a budget figure, Griffin said he has spoken with Town Counsel who advised the town manager's recommended budget is the budget that must be considered first by Town Meeting. But the town manager does have an obligation to show the budget request certified by the school committee to Town Meeting.

In a perfect world, the school committee would like to see an increase of $1.6 million over last year's budget, or roughly 13 percent. The compromise of a 5 percent increase would add about $617,219. Griffin's 3 percent increase would add $370,000 to the school budget. For the schools to have a 5 percent increase, either the money will have to be found somewhere on the town's side of the budget, which means town departments could see cuts, or there will need to be an override vote at the Annual Town Meeting, scheduled for Saturday, April 1.

"We need 5 percent as a starting point to open the doors. We need to get away from the old way of thinking and playing catch up. We need to tell the town what we need to manage responsibly," said school committee member Pam Wilson.

Rick Flynn has been on the school committee for the past six years and said the way the budget is being handled this year is much different than in years past. He said in the past the school committee has drafted a budget it thought was responsible, then put the number out on the table for the town to consider.

This year, Griffin is asking all town departments to work within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, to ensure a balanced budget is voted on at Town Meeting, which will avoid having to return to Town Meeting in the fall to certify a new budget.

Flynn said when he heard Griffin had recommended an increase of $370,000 for the schools, he thought it was "somewhat unrealistic," because the only place to cut is salaries. Rather than stay within the 3 percent recommended by the town manager and risk devastating the school system "we do have another option which is to do our own thing and present with a much higher number" and put all our cards on the table, said Flynn.

Member Adrienne MacCarthy said she agreed with Flynn and that she has spent a lot of time looking at the budget and sees it as a tool to help the committee envision its mission of "continuing the commitment to excellence."

"I couldn't rationalize giving up much," she said, adding she couldn't imagine presenting a budget that only had a $370,000 increase. "It would decimate this school system. I truly believe we will need an override to sustain our commitment toward excellence."

"I'm not being disrespectful to the town side, but they have their job to do for the town and we have our job to do for the schools and it's totally separate," she said.

Committee member Alfred Slanetz said in his opinion, "We have to negotiate with the town to bridge the gap. I don't think they want to decimate the schools either," he said.

Flynn said what he feels needs to happen now, is that the residents need to direct both the selectmen and the school committee. "People need to fight for what they want," he said, adding the schools have had to beg for everything they've gotten over the years and if people want to keep the level of service they have become accustomed to, they need to publicly show their support and come to meetings.

"We need to show the schools are the most important part of our budget," said Wilson.

School committee chairman Jamie Williams said she had spoken with Griffin and understands the process he is trying to put in place this year. She said there are limited funds for all departments and everyone is being asked to present one balanced budget that comes within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, one restorative budget which would provide the wish list items that are still very important if funding becomes available, and a third aspirational budget which would include all the items the school department would want if funds were unlimited.

"I think that's very confusing. Let's be completely honest about what we're trying to accomplish here," Flynn said.

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh added, "It's difficult to present a balanced budget. The schools can't function that way," adding if the school department stays within 2-1/2, "We'll be giving out pink slips by the middle of April."

The school department, board of selectmen, and advisory committee were scheduled to hold a budget hearing Thursday, Feb. 2 after the Mariner went to press.

Bryanton to resign from CEA

After 20 years on the job, Director of Cohasset Elder Affairs Kathy Bryanton has decided to resign from the position, effective June 30, 2006. "This is when my contract is finished and I feel the department of Elder Affairs needs to follow a new direction. I have enjoyed my time and work in Cohasset," she stated in a letter to the board of selectmen.

"I leave Cohasset with the highest regard for the wonderful people that I have had the opportunity to work and associate with. The long association has been a very happy one for me, and I leave with all the sincere gratitude to the board of directors, board of selectmen, and the people in town who have stepped up to act as volunteers for all these years," she said.

Selectmen look at Monday nights

Selectmen may be meeting on Monday nights rather than Tuesdays at some point in the near future, but not before Town Meeting, scheduled for April 1. Selectman Gary Vanderweil suggested the change, as personally, Monday nights would be easier for him than Tuesdays, and he finds those who travel for business are typically in town on Monday, which could make things easier for other board members. "That being said, when I ran, I knew meetings were on Tuesdays," he said.

However, members of the board said selectmen's meetings used to be held on Monday nights and somewhere along the line, that was changed, although no one could remember when or why.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he had heard rumors that Monday meetings interfered with Monday night football and perhaps that is why the meetings were changed. Selectmen chairman Fred Koed joked if meetings are moved back to Monday night and have to compete with football. "What will that do to our ratings."

Griffin cautioned the board there are many holidays which fall on Mondays, so it should take that into consideration before making any changes. Selectman Michael Sullivan said during those weeks, the board could make a policy to roll the meetings to Tuesday. The board will bring the matter up again at a future meeting.

Pond Street is in rough shape

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he is very concerned about the condition of Pond Street, which is under construction by the water department. He said with MBTA construction around town and the Sohier Street closing, Pond Street is being heavily traveled and the condition of the road is terrible. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he had spoken to the water department and it is trying to improve the road as quickly as it can.

DAFFODIL DAYS

Hey Cohasset, here is a wonderful way to bring a bit of "spring" into someone's life and help support a very important and worthwhile foundation. If you are interested in helping in the fight against cancer through volunteering, please contact the American Cancer Society at 888-648-4880.

Residents have until Friday, March 3 to place orders for daffodils. Receive a bunch of 10 flowers for a donation of $7. This year also marks the addition of Flowers R. Hope, a special Boyds Bear designed exclusively for the American Cancer Society Daffodil Days Bear and a Bunch that can be ordered for a donation of $25. The Bear and Bunch campaign is only offered during Daffodil Days and isn't available without flowers.

March is Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month, and colorectal cancer can be preventable through screening. Contact your American Cancer Society for information 24 hours a day, seven days a week, through its National Cancer Information Center at 1.800.ACS.2345 and via the Web at www.cancer.org.

Efforts toward more tolerance in town continue

Cohasset keeps 'No Place for Hate' status

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Diversity Committee is proud to continue the tradition of being certified as a No Place for Hate community for the fifth year in a row. The designation means Cohasset has been recognized by the New England office of the Anti-Defamation League for its commitment to maintaining a zero-tolerance policy for hate crimes, hate language, and any acts of intolerance or racism.

Co-chairs of the diversity committee Susan Etkind and Chartis Tebbetts informed selectmen Tuesday of the town's designation once again, and invited them to participate in the committee's ongoing efforts by designating a formal liaison from the board.

The committee told selectmen of the many events the diversity committee has been involved with to help bring forward a mission of tolerance. Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed, who volunteered to be the liaison to the committee, said he enjoyed attending the Martin Luther King Day breakfast, which was one of the most recent programs put on with the help of the diversity committee, and looks forward to other programs in the future.

The Cohasset Diversity Committee heads up the town's NPFH recertification process. Cohasset must meet a number of qualifications in order to be certified, including offering programming to spread the word of acceptance and tolerance for differences in the community.

Cohasset Diversity Committee co-chairs Susan Etkind and Chartis Tebbetts proudly display the certificate that certifies the town as a "No Place For Hate" community.

Etkind said in October, the diversity committee held an event in celebration of United Nations Day. In February of 2005, it hosted an International Day party. "Both were supported by many local merchants with food, and by 100 or more attendees from many nations and cultures — most of whom live in Cohasset," she said.

Etkind also said the diversity committee regularly partners with Project Safeguard (formerly the drug and alcohol awareness committee), the Social Service League, the Cohasset Clergy Association, and the Social Awareness Club at the middle-high school.

"During the school year, 2004-2005, we held four evening meetings with either a single speaker or a panel to bring to the community at large a varied program about diversity and international perspectives," she said. "Subjects included perspectives on AIDS/HIV here and around the world, Italian art history, how the United States is perceived by other countries, and living on the South Shore when you are from somewhere else."

Tebbetts said while the diversity committee often works with the schools, its varied programs demonstrate "we want the activities to be interesting for everyone."

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer asked if there are any issues the diversity committee/no place for hate committee has encountered in the community which give it concern.

Etkind said the committee hears more from the schools in terms of hate language and acts, and the most recent example would be the threat at the high school, in which a student left a note in a student bathroom which referenced the 1999 Columbine High School massacre.

Etkind said she has been told there are students who feel bullied at school, in particular, some who participate in the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, or METCO program, which allows students from more urban areas to commute to schools in suburban areas as a way of expanding educational opportunities and reducing racial imbalance. She heard there are problems with those students feeling accepted and some have had language used against them. In addition, she said there have been incidents where students who are Jewish have had comments directed at them. "Anyone who is slightly different," can be targeted, she said, which is why it is so important to spread the message of tolerance.

In addition, the staff at the schools and some students do not feel there is enough programming going on to accentuate differences, and the committee will continue that mission moving forward.

The town was given a $1,000 grant from the Anti-Defamation League, a matching grant from the PSO, and some money which was raised from other community groups to sponsor peer leader training at the middle-high school.

"This program will be launched this week, with a visit from the director of the World of Difference Program at the ADL to CMHS to begin building a plan tailored to the needs of Cohasset," said Etkind.

Next month, the diversity committee will be sponsoring a training session on hate-crimes awareness and response for the town and school staff. A speaker series this spring will include talks about the Tuskegee Airmen and Islam, as well as hosting a Holocaust survivor at CMHS.

CEA makes a plea for volunteer coordinator funds

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When your fiscal resources total less than one-half of one percent of a $30 million budget, it can be hard to make ends meet. That is exactly the situation Director of Elder Affairs Kathy Bryanton has been facing for years.

While she says she does the best she can with what she has, and is always actively seeking out grant possibilities, one of those grants has run out this year, and there is not enough money in the budget to replace the position which is being lost.

Bryanton, along with chairman of the board of elder affairs Anna Abbruzzese, came before the board of selectmen Tuesday to plead their case for restoring a volunteer coordinator position which will no longer be funded by a grant this year. Currently, Town Manager Bill Griffin says there is not enough money to support the position in the budget.

The CEA relies almost entirely on volunteerism. Office help, van drivers, luncheon helpers — they all became involved out of the goodness of their hearts. The director, outreach coordinator, and volunteer are all paid positions, but that volunteer coordinator could soon be a thing of the past.

"There are people who are truly depending on this and I can't stress enough the importance of bringing this position back."
— Selectman Rob Spofford, CEA liaison

Bryanton submitted a budget she thought was fair and reasonable. Her total request was for $209,954, a figure which included $20,490 for a volunteer coordinator. However, Griffin is under tight restrictions to recommend a budget which stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law that caps the amount a town can raise its tax levy from year to year, and he said at this time, the funding is not there to pay for that position. He has recommended $179,024.

"Bill does not feel we can include the volunteer coordinator position and I respect that. These are tough financial times," said Bryanton, but added it is projected that by 2020 Cohasset will double its senior population, and the resources provided by the CEA will become even more critical as time goes on.

Bryanton explained Cohasset currently has an older, frailer senior population than many surrounding towns, and therefore, more resources are needed. She said the CEA is very fortunate to have roughly 150 volunteers, and it takes a lot to coordinate them all. "They drive vans, they work in the kitchen, they work in the dining room, they work in the office, they provide instruction for classes," said Bryanton, adding without the help of volunteers, the CEA would not be able to provide the services it does.

She said many seniors would not be able to go out shopping or get their hair done or take a trip to the post office without the help of CEA transportation, and someone needs to be there to coordinate drivers and make sure when that senior is waiting for a ride, someone will be there to pick them up.

Selectman Rob Spofford who is the board's liaison with the CEA, said he is amazed with what the office accomplishes with such little funding. "People depend on the volunteers showing up and you need a full time person to coordinate that. There are people who are truly depending on this and I can't stress enough the importance of bringing this position back."

Selectman Chairman Fred Koed added coordinating such a large number of volunteers, "Seems like a pretty full time job."

Spofford asked the women what will happen if the position is not reinstated.

"We go back to playing BINGO," replied Abbruzzese.

"We can't drop the ball with the seniors. We owe it to them. You can't go up to a little old lady who wants to go to the market and say no, you can't do it. This may be the one day a week she gets out," she added.

Griffin said he would like the board of selectmen to listen to the budget presentations from each department head before voting to recommend any of the budgets. "It pained me to have to do it," he said of cutting the position, and said he hears everything the board and the CEA representatives are saying.

At the close of the meeting, Abbruzzese left the board with one last wish — "May you all grow old gracefully."

DPW makes a case for more personnel

Not enough staff for big workload

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

If Department of Public Works superintendent Carl Sestito had his way, there would be more funds in the fiscal 2007 budget to pay for an employee to clear the town's brooks and streams, which could become an environmental issue. If money was no object, it would also like to purchase a new dump truck, sander, and utility truck.

But unfortunately, Sestito is one of many department heads who has been told his needs will not be met in full this year, as there simply is not enough money to go around. Sestito came before the selectmen Tuesday to explain how limited funding is affecting his operation.

Sestito explained there is a long list of items to be completed by the DPW, but without the staff to do it, items must be prioritized and sometimes matters take a back seat. To help with staffing issues, Town Manager Bill Griffin has recommended allocating roughly $39,000 to replace a position that was taken out of last year's budget.

There are three divisions in the DPW, including the tree and park department, highway department and recycling transfer facility. Sestito said he would like the additional person to work in the highway division, which would make a total of five workers in that department. Three employees cover the RTF and five work for tree and park.

Sestito explained all three divisions help each other out. He said every department helps with trash pickup, and when things get slow for the tree and park department in the winter, they will help with snow removal and sanding of streets.

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked Sestito if currently he feels he is able to get done what needs to be done. "Absolutely not. Not with four guys on the highway department," Sestito replied. He added just to sweep the streets and sidewalks after a long winter of salt and sand, it takes two men 12 weeks.

He said an even more pressing matter is finding the time to send someone around to clear out the catch basins. Griffin said that was the rationale behind adding an employee to the department — to have someone dedicated to keeping up with storm drain management. "We've got to pick up the pace because of our requirements with federal law," Griffin said.

On a day-to-day basis, Sestito said he never knows what to expect when he comes in. "I don't plan anything," he said, adding he jumps into his day only after he has listened to the answering machine to see if there are any pressing matters, and after he sees who is in for the day. "With 12 guys, I'm shorthanded 42 weeks of the year," he said, as many are longtime employees who have accrued a substantial amount of vacation time.

Sestito said currently, there is a backlog of items that should be done in town, but haven't, such as replacement and/or repair of fencing and signs. "There is a lot of ongoing maintenance," he said. He added the town has done a lot of work on its fields and parks and there are irrigation systems in place and keeping up with cutting the grass in the summer is a huge chore. "Tree and park gets two helpers part-time in the summer, but they can barely keep up," he said, adding a day or two of rain can really affect the workload.

Griffin said with the amount of work the DPW is expected to handle and the limited staff it has, "he's (Sestito) doing a great job," adding the board only needs to look at the size of the Common, then factor that in with the many other pieces of property which must be maintained to realize the scope of work the DPW employees cover. "They're getting a lot done with the staff they have, but we could enhance it," he said.

Cohasset students eat up healthy school lunch choices

Cohasset middle high school provides the food for itself, as well as the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools. The middle-high school cafeteria is very similar to a college dining hall. There are many different "stations" where students have a variety of options, including entrees, a deli, and a salad bar. "Our salad consumption has increased drastically" over the course of the past few years, said Levy.

Levy said he has taken many unhealthy choices off the menu, and in turn has added many healthy alternatives. French fries are no longer offered, ice cream has been taken out of the freezer cases, and there is no more soda in the vending machines. Instead, students have been flocking to the deli where they have a variety of lean meats and cheeses to choose from, accompanied by either100 percent juice, water, or milk, and topped off with frozen yogurt or ice pops. "We also have fresh and canned fruits," he said, adding virtually every snack offered in the cafeteria has eight grams of fat or less as an informal requirement.

Levy said the state Department of Education has required a number of changes due to the high rate of obesity in young children. He said there are also bills in the works at the state level which would impose further restrictions on what kinds of food can be served during and even after the school day on school grounds.

"They're going to mandate a lot, but we're not that concerned about it," said Levy. With the work Levy has completed, he believes Cohasset's program will likely be able to stay the way it is regardless of what is passed. "We're way above the curve as far as changes we're supposed to make. We're far beyond most school districts and cities in the commonwealth," he said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said there is an act of legislation in progress called the "Act to Promote Proper School Nutrition" that would apply standards to food and beverages sold in vending machines, school stores, concession stands, a la carte lines, cafeterias, and during bake sales and fund raisers.

A copy of the bill indicates the new guidelines would not permit food to be sold for which fat contributes to more than 30 percent of its total calories, or 7 grams of fat maximum per package (not including nuts and seeds). Saturated fat could be no more than 10 percent of a package's total calories, or 2 grams maximum per package from saturated and trans fat. Carbohydrates could contribute to no more than 30 grams total, including natural and added sugar.

The standards also apply to beverages, and only water, fruit or vegetable-based juices with at least 50 percent juice and no added natural or artificial sweeteners, and milk could be provided. Drinks would also be limited to 12 ounce serving sizes for juices and 16 ounce servings for milks. There would be no serving size limits for water. In Cohasset, virtually all the standards that would be imposed if the bill passes have already been met.

"I'm glad Cohasset is taking a pre-emptive stance" on improving nutrition in its schools, said Bradley.

While the bill was drafted largely in part due to the rising cases of obesity in school aged children, in Cohasset Levy said having overweight students is not his biggest concern.

"I worry the other way," he said, as being too thin can have just as negative an impact on a student's overall health. "We want to have the offerings for a well-rounded, well balanced diet," he said, to ensure there are healthy choices for even the pickiest eater.

Since Levy took over as a town employee and the changes to the food services program were implemented, the number of school lunches being bought has dramatically increased. "We sell almost 300 lunches a day," he said, where previously, the school had been selling roughly 30.

Levy said while there have been rumors the food services program has lost money, the opposite is true. He said at the end of the school year last year, the food services account had made a profit of several thousand dollars.

Levy said the school lunch program would not be the success it is without the help of his very cooperative staff. "Without their support and the support of the school administration who let me take the ball and run with it," he said, the changes toward a more healthy lunch program would not have taken place.

Dormitzer reports on FAA progress

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said a meeting has been scheduled with the Federal Aviation Administration for Feb. 17 and at that time some final tracks for flights going over the North and South Shore will be presented.

Dormitzer serves as co-chairman of the Community Advisory Committee, which has been working on many initiatives to help improve the noise pollution communities under Logan's flight paths now face, and said he is optimistic about the latest developments.

"The FAA is showing some flexibility," said Dormitzer, adding it is moving in the direction of soon having all flights controlled by computers. Currently, there is a control tower in Merrimack, N.H. that directs all the flights by voice communication and radar. The FAA wants flights to be controlled using GPS points, which is good news for Cohasset.

Many communities have been working to get flights redirected to stay over the ocean for a longer period of time, thereby lessening noise pollution on the ground. However, with human controllers, changing all the flight paths would be a complicated situation. With the new GPS system, "When a plane takes off, there will be a computer on board that will have the points set and it will fly automatically," he said.

Upgrades slated for Music Circus

Music Circus General Manager Vince Longo came before the planning board Wednesday, Jan. 25 with preliminary plans to expand its restroom facilities.

Longo explained the restrooms have been the same for the past 45 years. By expanding they hope to make the restrooms more convenient by improving traffic flow.

Planning board member Bob Sturdy joked when he pointed out the Music Circus currently only has four restrooms for men and 17 for the women and he hoped that ratio would be improved.

The expansion would be more than 200 square feet, which means it will require a site plan review from the planning board. Longo said he would file the project with the planning board the following day, to ensure it can get through the site plan review process and complete the renovations before the Music Circus season gets underway.

OPINION

Transit Oriented District

Cohasset has a new acronym that will be tossed around in the months ahead "TOD," which stands for Transit Oriented District.

TODs are not new, although the concept – which is part of Gov. Mitt Romney's "Smart Growth" initiative — is relatively new in Massachusetts.

The multi-page proposed bylaw before voters at the annual Town Meeting on April 1, is based largely on the state model TOD bylaw.

In essence, TOD zoning overlay provides for mixed-use development near the train station in a pedestrian and commuter-friendly environment.

We are excited about the potential of the TOD for Cohasset and agree with proponents that with train construction moving along rapidly, the Town should consider acting on the TOD at the annual Town Meeting this spring so any development, such as combined curb cuts, could be coordinated with plans for the station.

We hear the voices of caution out there that fear the town is moving too quickly and urge the TOD be put off until the fall or next year. But we think if one steps back and takes a look at that stretch of 3A near the station, there's a real opportunity there to accomplish a lot – not the least of which is generating more tax revenue.

The run-down parcel near the station that includes the former Davenport property housing Aveni Cleaners, Mary Lou's News and a former boatyard and florist, needs redevelopment. The TOD could offer some real creativity for the site which would not be possible under its current zoning as light industry.

The Planning Board will conduct a public hearing on the TOD and several other proposed zoning articles on Feb. 22. It could be a long night but one that interested citizens could find well worth staying up for.

As we understand it, the TOD would not provide carte blanche for a developer. Plans could still be subject to a special permit from the Planning Board, which would conduct site plan review.

It is evident to everyone that Cohasset has a revenue problem that is not getting any better. There is no "manna from heaven" out there to provide the town the relief it needs and lift the burden off the residential taxpayer.

We often bring up neighboring Hingham in this column because we also cover that town and are familiar with the issues there. Hingham worked creatively with the new owners of the former Hingham Plaza – which had become a virtual ghost town and a very real eyesore. Today, Hingham, despite some real parking and traffic concerns, which were resolved, now has the Derby Street Shoppes. In the first year, the commercial value of the plaza escalated about $95 million – generating roughly $950,000 in taxes for fiscal 2006. And because of its location, the plaza had little impact on neighborhoods or quality-of-life issues. In fact, accidents on Derby Street have actually dropped thanks to the new traffic signals at the plaza.

Cohasset's TOD would encompass the train station and could turn out to be a real gem. Because of the fact Greenbush will soon come down the tracks – the time to act on the TOD is this spring.

As Peter Brown, chairman of the Economic Development Committee says:

"Why not provide a prudent zoning by-law that will guide new and better property developments at the northern gateway to the town?"

All too familar gesture at Tuesday's budget hearings

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

School budget proposals supported

TO THE EDITOR:

I have been giving the situation in our schools a great deal of thought and I conclude by offering my wholehearted support for the proposed 2007 school budget. Painful as it may seem, I feel that we are being given the opportunity to get our schools back on track and provide the level of resources we need to give our children a truly great education.

I can't quite believe that, after what seems like a minute, I have two daughters in high school, with one just about to leave for college. In the last eight years since we moved from London to Cohasset, and our children were warmly welcomed into first and fourth grade, we have watched them being supported and encouraged at every level. They have had the benefit of a tremendous public school education, wonderfully experienced and dedicated teachers, and an atmosphere of real community in schools where the entire faculty knew them by name. I have many examples, but most recently I think of how the guidance department and teachers helped with the nightmare of the college application process, working with us to explain this "foreign" system and get my daughter in exactly the right position to be accepted to the college of her choice. I also have memories of the very early days of adjusting to a new school, and how Mrs. Free carefully guided my first–grader through her first ever "show and tell" and guided me to finally stop following her into the classroom every day to offer unnecessary support.

The spirit and quality of education in Cohasset has been wonderful, but now I can see strains on the system. The class sizes are increasing and the teachers are managing with fewer and fewer resources. The enthusiasm and effort that allowed my daughter to successfully complete an AP class in tenth grade has had to be squashed — she now has to supplement her senior year classes with evening courses outside school. Have a look at your children's textbooks and see if they are anything close to the quality of the books you used 20 years ago and ask your children about art supplies, or why they can no longer take chorus in the second half of the high school year. There are examples of cuts at every grade level.

I feel very strongly about preserving and protecting public education. When I was growing up in Ireland, one of my mother's favorite expressions was "education's easy carried." It was her way of saying you will never regret working hard at school, a good education will make a real difference in your life — it will be your best investment and will never weigh you down! I still agree with her. I also think that as stakeholders making the decision about where best to invest our taxes, education continues to be a critical priority and one we can really afford to bear. We can carry this one and we will never regret it. That is why I support Dr Walsh's proposals and her new budget.

HEALTH NOTES

Pedestrian access to the train station

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The last Health Notes about walking was way back in November, 2005, and there have been some developments. The previous "Notes" waxed long and hard about the MBTA, which has deliberately omitted planning for pedestrian access to the proposed Cohasset 'T' Station. Fortunately, our dialog about the subject has borne fruit. According to the 'T', we can have pedestrian access if we pay for it" is what the "Notes" said. Well, Bob Hedlund recently (Jan.11) asked the Town to attend a meeting at T' chief Daniel Grabuskas' office to discuss 'Rails With Trails' which the Board of Health chooses to interpret as "Pedestrian Access to the 'T'".

The Board of Health has consistently approached the Rails with Trails initiative as a locally based method to get federal money to pay for the degradation of health which their subsidies to carbohydrates :sugar and grain, have indirectly caused. That is, if we have to eat Corn Pops and Sugary Fruit Creeps because they're cheap, the least we can do is try to induce people to walk to the bus stop. A weak wand at best.

The meeting with Grabuskas, that Hedlund, engineered was to support building a biking and walking corridor along the 'T' right of way. A reasonable proposition in many areas, but not where the original rail barons bought the cheapest and most level property: swamps, which we now call wetlands.

So, Cohasset, after looking at the difficulties and the realities of danger near a modern high speed suburban rail corridor, chose an expert who identified those places along the right of way which would be both safe and economical to build and came up with a plan to use some of our existing sidewalks, some new stretches of sidewalk, and some corridors along the right of way. In the end, the only area in which controversy became apparent was along a stretch where the 'T' had a clear road, and the Town would have to build more expensive sidewalks along 3A. As in most arguments, there is some right on both sides. And the cost of the solution, still unresolved, compared to the cost of the project in general, is almost negligible.

The meeting with Grabuskas, Hedlund, Cohasset Town officials and representatives from Scituate in the form of a RWT activist: Mark Fenton bore substantial fruit for Cohasset. After the compulsory posturings about mitigation, , safety, walking, health, and motherhood, we were able to determine that, in order for the Feds to fund walking trails it was necessary to ensure connectivity between towns. To that end, we were able to articulate to the head of the 'T' the following:

- With the Transportation Oriented Development grants which the Town is requesting, we will finally be able to realize our goal which is to induce the people of Cohasset to walk to more places as a matter of health. One of the more beneficial means of accomplishment of this goal is to facilitate walking and biking to the 'T' station. Without the grant, the Town will not have pedestrian

Case of the disappearing traffic light

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Once upon a time, in the charming village of Cohasset, the MBTA decided to restore a commuter rail line that had been abandoned years ago. As a part of this restoration, the Board of Selectmen entered into a Mitigation Agreement with the MBTA. This agreement spelled out certain responsibilities for the Town and the MBTA.

For the time being, this has been a large exercise in how to chase your own tail.

One of the features that was to have been provided to the Town, according to this agreement, is a new traffic light on Route 3A at the station exit. This will enable the cars to easily make a left turn onto Route 3A. And, a light will also be of assistance to pedestrians wanting to cross 3A on the new path the MBTA is building into Wompatuck Park.

The plot thickens – There was one stated condition to the installation of this traffic light. Massachusetts Highway Department (MHD) had to approve this light. (MHD has the final jurisdiction over this sort of thing.) But, MHD did not approve the light. So, the MBTA, being a very frugal organization, immediately withdrew the funds from the project that had been set aside to pay for the design and installation of this light.

The plot thickens even more – However, MHD had a change of heart and subsequently did approve the traffic light and notified the MBTA's contractor on April 28, 2005 of this change. At a summit meeting held, Jan. 6, 2006, by the Planning Board, with all concerned parties, MHD presented the approval letter to the MBTA who immediately denied ever having seen it.

So as we write this, Cohasset has an approved traffic light, the MBTA claims they no longer have funds, and Cohasset has an agreement from the MBTA stating that the MBTA will supply a traffic light. For the time being, this has been a large exercise in how to chase your own tail. We do expect that the MBTA will provide the traffic light, but we have not seen anything in writing, yet. Stay tuned.

Flash! We mentioned above about the bike path from the station to Wompatuck Park. Starting Feb 2nd, the MBTA will be clearing the path from Route 3A to Wompatuck. You might be able to see this as you drive down 3A toward Hingham.

Robert Burns supper is a kilt-clad affair

THE COLLEGE BOY

KATHLEEN HEALY

Third in a series: a mother's tale of a Cohasset boy's first year at a small coastal college in Scotland.

Men in kilts, even the ones not blessed with a fine physique or abundant and shiny locks, are handsome and majestic.

A bit of background After moving from Cohasset to a village in rural Scotland in the spring of 1995, young sons Gerald and Anthony were quickly introduced to a number of Scottish customs and traditions at the small village school which they had begun attending.

Ceilidh dancing (somewhat similar to American square dancing, but with better music!) formed a regular part of their school physical education classes and school dances. By the time they joined the village school, their classmates from age five to 11 were already skilled in the intricate formations and patterns which combined to form traditional Scottish dances with curious and wonderful names, such as Strip the Willow, The Dashing White Sergeant, The Gay Gordons, Eightsome Reel, and the always-popular Lassie Wi' The Yellow Coatie.

Some younger children had begun lessons on the chanter, and some older pupils were already years into their bagpipe or violin lessons.

Kilts were comfortably and confidently worn by both boys and girls for special occasions, such as dances and parties. The highlight of the school social calendar was the children's annual Burns Supper; a celebration in recitation and song which marked the anniversary of the January 25th, 1759 birth of Scotland's bard, Robert Burns.

Before Christmas, the schoolchildren began poring through printed collections of Burns' poetry, listening to song recordings, selecting and practicing oral recitations and pieces of music. After school resumed in the New Year, violin trios, chanter duets, the occasional struggle to tame a set of bagpipes, along with young voices singing She's Fair and Fause or recitations of The Highland Widow's Lament could be heard in the school playground, library and cloakroom. Our sons caught the spirit of the enterprise, and happily participated in the Burns Supper competitions. Burns Suppers take place at the end of January in schools, village halls and church halls all over the country, all in honor and pride for one man's voice and vision.

The College Boy

Fast–forward one decade, and the traditions, music, poetry, dance steps and attire of those first Burns Suppers are now well-kent (well-known and familiar) to Gerald in his freshman year at the University of St Andrews, on Scotland's rocky eastern shore.

For the January 2006 Burns Supper, Gerald, along with thousands of other men of all ages around Scotland, will attire himself in a tartan wool kilt, attach a kilt pin, pull on his cream woolen kilt socks, tuck ribbon flashes into the tops of his socks, arrange a heavy belt around the top of his kilt, hang a sporran pouch around his waist so that it hangs front and center on his kilt, button his dress shirt, insert his cuff links, knot his woolen necktie, shrug on and button his black woolen jacket and finally, slide the sgian dhu (ornamental dagger) into the side of one sock and pin a sprig of thistle onto his lapel. All this effort will be in preparation for a night of celebration of the life and works of Burns; a night of food and toasting, music and ceilidh dancing, culture and great fun.

In the last decade I've attended many events, such as weddings, ceilidhs and birthday celebrations which featured men in kilts and women in their finest finery. This I've learned: no matter how much effort, time and thought a woman has expended in her effort to impress and dazzle at these events, once she has been paired with a man in full-blown kilt attire, her game is lost. There is nothing to compete with the splendor and majesty of a man in a kilt. Men in kilts are like male birds seen against a snowy Cohasset winter; their plumage is bright and clear, designed to catch the eye of the beholder, while the female of its species can only carry on with respectable feathers of muted browns and grays. It's not fair, but it's the unhappy truth. Men in kilts, even the ones not blessed with a fine physique or abundant and shiny locks, are handsome and majestic. In Scotland, a boy or a man wearing the kilt has an air of confidence. You'll just need to take my word on this matter.

At a Burns Supper, after piping in the guests, the host's address of welcome and the Selkirk Grace, tradition is that the main course, the cooked haggis, is carried aloft on a silver platter into the dining hall, and it is followed by the chef, the bag-piper who is sounding his musical tribute, and the person who has the honor of addressing the haggis once it has been placed at the head table, by reciting the Burns poem "Tae a Haggis". At the appropriate place in the poem, the speaker plunges a dagger into the haggis. High drama abounding! When the main course arrives with a procession and a song, and addressed with its' own poem, then toasted by a roomful of people holding high their glasses of golden single malt, you can be certain a good evening awaits.

After a fine meal, there will a Toast to the Lassies, praising their honor, good sense and fine personal qualities, and a ladies' reply to the gents, again complete with much praising and toasting. The dancing will then begin and carry on long into the early hours of the next morning.

Our college boy has truly found a home at the University of St Andrews. We're delighted that he is a part of a university which is so well-suited to him. We know he's happy there, not just because he's told us so, but also because he rarely returns home to visit! This is the clearest indicator of his contentment with his new long, rocky place. His father and I continue to give thanks for his happiness.

And if you have Scottish roots, no matter how many generations back they go, consider raising a wee glass of golden nectar in honor of the bard this weekend. I'm sure that somewhere he'll be thanking you for it.

Kathleen Healy, a CHS graduate, lives and works in the west of Scotland.

Déjà vu in the capital

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was reading a book on John Adams the other day when the thought occurred to me that his day in Washington wasn't a hell of a lot different from ours.

There was a president who was hailed on one side, vilified on the other.

There was the threat of a war that no one actually wanted.

There were the initials XYZ that, in their day, raised passions as high as WMD (weapons of mass destruction) in ours.

There were the two political parties, each screaming at the other, neither listening.

Finally, there were the Alien and Sedition Acts, enacted by the party seeking security, denounced by the other in the name of liberty.

The Alien Act empowered Adams to seize and deport any non-citizen that he deemed to be a danger to the nation.

John Adams, a Federalist from Massachusetts, succeeded George Washington as president at a time when the old world was in turmoil from the French Revolution. He tried to maintain neutrality which angered our old allies, the French.

Adams tried to allay their fears but the French revolutionaries refused even to talk to his emissaries until they first coughed up a $250,000 bribe. Anti-Federalists, then called Republicans, thought he was lying to promote a war with France.

Finally, Adams released the text of the French demand after first blacking out the three names of the authors, who became known as X, Y and Z. A wave of angry patriotism swept the country. Republicans urged caution and were condemned for it.

Adams charged they were "agents of a foreign nation" and noted that there was "a party in this country devoted to their (French) interest." Congressman William Edmund demanded that Republicans take a more "manly course of conduct."

Republicans gave back as good as they got. Their paper, the Aurora, edited by Benjamin Franklin Bache, Ben's grandson, called Adams "blind, bald, crippled, toothless and querulous." He even questioned Washington's competence as a soldier.

Massachusetts Congressman Harrison Gray Otis warned "the times are full of danger and it would be the height of madness not to take every precaution in our power."

That set the stage for the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798.

The Sedition Act banned the writing, publishing or uttering of a "false, scandalous and malicious" nature against the U. S. government or the Congress or the President under penalty of a $2,000 fine or two years in jail. It passed by a party vote of 44-41.

The Alien Act empowered Adams to seize and deport any non-citizen that he deemed to be a danger to the nation. There would be no hearing, no counsel, no witnesses, no right to hear the charges, no right to present evidence.

If that wasn't enough, the time of residence needed to apply for citizenship was extended to 14 years, mostly because new immigrants tended to vote Republican.

The first man to be indicted under the Sedition Act was Matthew Lyon, a Republican congressman from Vermont, and publisher of a magazine called "Scourge of Aristocracy and Repository of Important Political Truths."

He was charged with "malicious (intent) to bring the President and government of the United States into contempt" for accusing Adams of being "swallowed up in a continued grasp for power, in an unbounded thirst for ridiculous pomp."

He was sentenced to four months in jail, a $1,000 fines and $60.96 in court costs and when he couldn't pay up a number of Republicans, including future Presidents Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and James Monroe, took up a collection for him.

The Alien and Sedition Acts expired with the Adams administration in March, 1801, and Jefferson, his Republican successor, had no further use for them.

Questions remain about proposed village bylaw change

COMMENTARY

ANDREW QUIGLEY

After the publication of my commentary last week concerning the proposed zoning by-law for the village area which will allow for high-density, mixed-use (commercial and residential) construction, I spoke with members of the Planning Board and Sewer Commission.

Although those discussions proved informative and enlightening (and I should note that included Planning Bd. member Peter Pratt, who was mentioned in the commentary and who as always was courteous, professional, and engaging), there are still many open questions that are of concern to ordinary citizens regarding the proposed by-law change. The purpose of this commentary is to state those concerns succinctly and directly (without the sarcasm of my column of last week for which I apologize to all concerned).

I also initially wish to point out that I think the proposal by Mr. Sawchuk for the 1811 building is a wonderful idea. There is no doubt that there is some demand among some of our senior citizens for small (700-900 sq. ft), market-rate apartments in our village area. He has presented a quality proposal to the town which by itself will have little impact on our village area. (I am curious however, to know pursuant to what provision of state law he will be creating this senior housing.)

However, neither the plan for the 1811 property nor the need for low-cost rental housing for our seniors exists in a vacuum. In order to permit these plans to go forward in our village area, a change in the bylaw is being proposed that represents the potential for a fundamental transformation of our village. It will allow the owner of the 1811 project, for example, to construct a new building (behind the 1811 structure) consisting of commercial space on the first floor and 12 apartments on two-floors above (six units per floor) on a 6000 sq. ft. footprint for the new building.

Those areas of concern, for which the answers presently do not exist, can be summarized as follows:

- If 12 apartment units can be constructed in a new building with a small, 6000 sq. ft. footprint, how many more condo/apartment units can we expect to see built in our village because of this zoning change? How many buildings will be razed and what will their replacements look like?
- Although the 1811 property owner says his will be a senior-only project, the by-law does not expressly provide solely for senior housing. The owners and developers of other village properties will be able to rent to whomever they can find to pay the rent. Thus, who will be the target market to occupy this new housing? How will this influx of residential population change the character of our downtown? Can we expect that there will be predominantly senior citizens or a young, partying-type of crowd living there?
- In every other community where I have lived, whenever that city or town has sought to undertake the difficult and sensitive task of revitalizing a downtown area, there is a vision that is presented to, and adopted by, a consensus of the community. Appropriate zoning by-laws are then tailored to fit that vision based on specific information prepared by experts hired by the city or town. Who has presented a vision for our village and what is that vision? Where are the reports from experts supporting it, in which every parcel is looked at and an examination made of its potential impact on the whole? Studies are made to detail traffic and parking impacts, along with anticipated tax revenue and costs in the growth of services, among other things. Where are those reports? Instead of the proposed 10,000 sq. ft. lot minimum, where is the analysis comparing what would be the result if the minimum lot size for this mixed use (which now is 40,000 sq. ft.) were 15,000, or 20,000, or 30,000 sq. ft.?
- There appears to have been no coordination with the sewer commission and no consideration of the limitations of the central sewer district in proposing this article. While it is true that the sewer board gave the 1811 developer a permit to connect to the town sewer, there has been no input from the sewer board about the impact of "X" number of additional units on sewer capacity if the by-law is approved. After speaking to two sewer board members, I learned that their engineers have told them that they presently have capacity for 23 hook-ups — of which the 1811 house now has taken 12. If we get applications for another 30-40-50-60-70 hook-ups, will we have to expand the sewer plant, at great expense? How will that affect the Little Harbor project? Or can the sewer board say, "Sorry, we're full," but then face a multitude of lawsuits? Shouldn't the Planning Board have explored these issues before drawing up a new zoning by-law that inevitably will increase density in an area with limited sewer capacity?
- What is the status of Avalon and its 250-unit apartment complex? How does that factor into the equation for housing needs in our community? Can anyone seriously argue that if Avalon goes through (not to mention Cedarmere and the Cook Estate), we still will need additional high density rental or ownership housing units for any segment of our population?
- Finally, this comment: I enjoy our village the way it is. It is a family-friendly commercial area, often described as the quintessential New England village. There should be no doubt that this by-law proposal will represent a fundamental shift in its character (from commercial to residential) and scale (more buildings, bigger buildings, more cars, more congestion, and less parking). On the other hand, if we can improve upon what we already have and maintain its family-friendliness, then by all means, let's hear that plan. But let's get all of the facts on the table, before we get to the floor of Town Meeting, so all of us can make a reasoned and informed judgment as to whether we are sacrificing the quality of life that we enjoy today. In short, what do we stand to gain vs. what do we stand to lose?

Support entire school budget increase

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing as a concerned parent. While I have always supported the overrides that the school department has requested, I confess that I have not been as attuned to the degradation of our school system over the past few years as I should have been. I recently attended a meeting sponsored by the Committee Supporting Cohasset Schools where I became informed, and concerned, about the importance of the FY07 School Budget.

Over the past few years, Cohasset has experienced sharp decreases in aid from the state coupled with rising student populations and rising costs. The result has been an overall decline in the number of teachers and programs, along with larger class sizes in all four schools. Our town manager wants the school department to balance its budget within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, yet the School Committee and Superintendent Walsh have stated that because 75percent of their budget is made up of teachers' salaries, it takes at least a 6-7 percent increase to meet contractual obligations and fixed costs. Even that 6-7 percent is not enough to restore positions that had to be cut within the past few years when we lost state aid, let alone provide programs that our students need to be competitive in the 21st century.

Our own children have experienced both public and private school systems in Canada, Australia and here on the South Shore. When we moved to the US in 1998, one of our primary reasons for choosing Cohasset was its strong school system. I wasn't living here when Prop.2-1/2 passed but it is my understanding that requests for overrides to supplement the school department's budget are not, as some Cohasset residents would like us to believe, a result of poor fiscal management, but instead, are a reflection of the community's desire to have the schools be a high priority for the town. Given the needs based budget that Dr. Walsh has presented, we shouldn't be appalled at override requests. We should be expecting override requests until our budget adequately reflects the programs required to meet the 5-year educational strategic plan. As School Committee member Rick Flynn has stated, we're playing catch-up.

Two of my children currently attend the High School. My three younger children are at Derby Academy and will likely enter CHS when they reach the 9th grade. I am alarmed to read about upperclassmen having to take study halls or an extra gym class due to the limited number of electives offered. I am alarmed that there are only two guidance counselors for the entire high school. I am alarmed that Latin can only be offered once per year.

But what alarms me the most is that the parent community does not realize how much trouble our school system is in. It's time for everyone to start paying attention to what we have already lost and how much more we will lose if we don't stand behind our superintendent and support her entire budget increase. I urge every parent to get informed, attend school committee meetings, contact the Committee Supporting Cohasset Schools, and most importantly attend town meeting and vote.

I urge you to support Dr. Walsh and support our schools.

True friend will be missed

TO THE EDITOR:

To me, Jack Golden, who passed away last week, was the brother I never had. He called all his many friends "pal". He was proudly Irish through and through and enjoyed commiserating with me about my English Yankee heritage.

Jack, to me, stands in the Pantheon of great men and women who truly love people and live their daily lives helping people in trouble.

Over his long life, Jack helped hundreds of people, both close friends and people he hardly knew. To him, it was enough that they were in trouble.

Also, for decades, Jack was the "go to" guy in South Shore Democratic politics. He had everyone's ear because he had helped them all in some way.

His declining health in recent years prevented his continued involvement in local affairs, but his final triumph was helping his friend and political confidant Bill Delahunt win his seat in Congress in an exceedingly close primary election.

During the 10 years "Pierson to Person" aired on local access television, Jack was responsible for bringing over 100 guests on the show and significantly increased its visibility and credibility.

Jack Golden and his wife, Doris, have been very dear friends to my wife, Molly, and me.

You will be greatly missed, dear friend. It was a unique privilege to know such a caring and good man. I know you are now with the Lord, and I know you are calling Him "Pal."

Annual Cabaret, a hit!

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Middle High School Arts Boosters hosted the annual Cabaret at Atlantica Restaurant on Jan. 19. Every year patrons are treated to an array of new talent and this year's event continued in that spirit. From the High School Chorus to the individual performances, the evening was a total success.

We would like to thank the following people for their continued support: Michelle Scully & her hard working staff at Atlantica; Mr. Bryan Marks and Ms. Stephanie Hoskin, musical instructors at the Middle High School; Reverend Gary Ritts from the Second Congregational Church for accompanying many of the performers; and finally thanks to all who attended and made the night shine.

If you would like more information about the Cohasset Arts Boosters, please contact Elaine Breslow or Paula Dickinson and don't forget to visit our new website at cohassetartsboosters.com.

Perspective on preservation

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset has many features that deserve to be preserved, especially the Town Common. But is the commercial area of the village one of them? Are any of its buildings the site of an event of historical significance? Well, there are a few that are considered historical, though young compared with the historical buildings of Europe and Asia. Are any of the buildings great examples of period architecture or of unique workmanship? Are any of them uniquely beautiful?

As a group, have they any redeeming features (other than that we have gotten used to them, and they generate an affection similar to that we feel for a tattered old jacket that wasn't much in the first place but we hate to throw away). Is the village quaint, or is it just a hodge-podge of undistinguished buildings of eclectic styles, with a few colonials whose historical value has been eroded by butchering the facades and adding store fronts? Are the add-on facades worthy of preservation?

Granted, bylaws should not be changed or variances issued without careful consideration of the original reasons for the bylaw and the future consequences of changing it or issuing a variance. But let's not get too solemn about "preservation" unless there is something there really worth preserving. Some old stuff is worth preserving, but not just because it is old. If it doesn't have any better reason than mere age to justify preservation, then surely it can be discarded or modified when there comes a better use for the space. Serving the people's needs shouldn't be shortchanged by misplaced reverence for preserving old stuff just because it's old.

The criteria for "affordable" housing would exclude most Cohasset residents but that shouldn't be interpreted as meaning there is no demand by Cohasset residents for rental housing. There certainly is such a demand, and it should be recognized in considering bylaw changes or variances.

Before leaving the subject of preservation; are you having knee joint or hip joint problems? They may be caused by, or exacerbated by, how you enter your automobile. We instinctively put one foot in first, than with one foot still grounded and the other in the car, defy the laws of physics and torture our already stressed joints by semi-squatting while swiveling and lowering the posterior into the seat. A more joint-friendly way is to sit in first, the swivel on the seat to bring the feet in. It's more demure than macho, but better wimpy than gimpy!

Fiscal 2007 police budget won't quell staffing concerns

can be called in at any time, but they are not required to come in.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said the budget includes $250,000 in salaries for dispatchers. "Can the police and firefighters go back to doing it?" he asked.

Hussey explained calls for both departments come into one dispatch station and last year it answered more than 11,000 calls. He said it does not make sense to have officers serving as dispatchers. He said if there is a bad accident on Rte. 3A, all three officers on the shift will need to be sent out. One officer can attend to the scene while the other two block traffic in both directions. Usually an officer out on patrol can respond the fastest to the accident scene.

The officer can then update responders from the fire department when they arrive. Everyone on duty at the fire department responds when there is an accident to ensure there is an ambulance and fire truck available. The dispatcher is the only person left behind at the station.

During that accident, there could be close to 100 calls that come in to the station by people who drive by. The dispatcher must handle the calls about the accident, potentially coordinate a MedFlight helicopter and perhaps mutual aid if something else happens in town while everyone is responding.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said in his view, the overtime costs are really what the department has to look out for. He said an assessment must be done which accurately calculates the overtime the department knows it will have due to members taking allowed vacation and sick time. Currently there is $210,000 in the recommended overtime budget. Hussey requested $325,000.

Dormitzer also brought up the municipal benchmarking report which the town recently received and said compared to the town's peer groups, "We have a bigger police force than other towns." Vanderweil added that is likely because of the minimum manning requirement outlined in the union contract.

Spofford said the town has signed a contract and for the next three years, and it must abide by that contract so there is no sense discussing the possibility of trying to change the minimum manning requirement at this point.

Vanderweil suggested having a meeting in executive session soon to get the conversation going and see what the union thinks.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said it is important to note while the benchmarking report might say Cohasset has more officers, it does not take into account the specific details of the town. "Some towns don't have a stretch of 3A like we do," he said, reminding the board it is a state highway.

Hussey agreed and said he feels the benchmarking study is somewhat limited in what it looks at for the very reason that things like state highways or traffic from venues such as the Music Circus, and attractions such as the beach and the harbor are not taken into account. Hussey joked in some towns Cohasset was compared with, "there are cows and people," and those towns may not need as many officers.

Hussey said the report also does not show whether other towns are using permanent intermittent officers on a regular basis, which are not considered full-time staff, but may be acting as almost full-time department members. In response to Vanderweil's suggestion the town consider reducing minimum manning requirements, "I wouldn't recommend it at all, especially during the day."

Spofford said he knows there is a perception in town that there is waste in the police department budget, and it simply isn't true. "I welcome anyone to show me those inefficiencies," he said.

School officers

Hussey said he would like to be able to dedicate one of his officers to helping the youth in town, especially in light of the threats which have plagued the middle-high school since May of last year. "Look at all the different towns that surround us, most of them have officers in the school," he said. He added when two Marshfield High School students plotted a massacre at the school in September 2004, students who found out about the plot went to a school resource officer and plans were halted in their tracks. The officer who would be in Cohasset's schools would be used toward minimum manning. "It would in essence replace the position lost last year," he said, meaning he is only asking for one officer to be added to the payroll this year, whether that person is used to help out in the schools or during the night shift.

Town Manger Bill Griffin pointed out while he would like to be able to hire an officer for the schools, it is currently not included in his recommended budget. It is on the top of his list should funding become available. Half of the funding for the position is included in the school department's budget.

The police department has tried to supplement its budget through grants, namely through Homeland Security. Hussey said Cohasset has joined forces with the towns of Hull, Scituate, Hingham and Weymouth and all have chipped in with grant funds to hire a grant writer. He said so far, the town has received some protective suits with Homeland Security funds, however, there was no money allocated for training in how to use the suits, which will require applying for another grant. Hussey said the department will continue to pursue grant opportunities wherever possible.

Fire dept. service calls are on the rise

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

When a call comes in to the fire department, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said often the ladder truck stays behind. With two department members on the ambulance and two department members on the pump engine, there simply aren't enough members on duty to drive the third vehicle.

Minimal staff at the fire department was just one of the concerns brought forward by Lincoln during budget discussions with the board of selectmen Tuesday, Jan. 24. While Lincoln's requests for fiscal 2007 totaled $2,014,597, Town Manager Bill Griffin recommended $1,842,864. Griffin's recommendation is an increase of $55,463 from fiscal 2006, or roughly 3 percent.

While there are no minimum manning requirements outlined in the contracts for members of the fire department as there are for the police department, Lincoln said the town has agreed to have four members on duty at all times. "I'm comfortable with four men, but five would be better," said Lincoln.

With four people on duty "the aerial ladder doesn't leave (the station) and it's as important as any piece of equipment we have," he said, adding in a fire, ventilation of a building is critical early on in order to save the property and the ladder truck allows access to the highest points of a building. "It sits in the station unmanned," he said. Often, Lincoln said he will leave his house during an emergency to come down to the station and drive a truck himself.

Lincoln has been a member of the Cohasset Fire Department for the past 37 years, and therefore has a long-range historical perspective. He said he has seen the department grow from responding to 315 emergency incidents in 1969 to 1,784 in 2005. He has also seen the station through the transition from relying on ambulance service from South Shore Hospital to providing its own ambulance service (South Shore Hospital stopped offering the service to the town Dec. 31, 2003).

Cohasset has certified paramedics on staff and currently nine of the 24 total department members are paramedics. The department can require all new hires be certified as paramedics until there are 20 on the department. Adding the paramedics has allowed the department to be able to increase its ambulance service from Basic Life Support to Advanced Life Support.

Chief Roger Lincoln said he has seen the department grow from responding to 315 emergency incidents in 1969 to 1,784 in 2005.

Lincoln explained with BLS, those who respond must be certified EMTs, but they are limited in the treatment they can provide. BLS includes administering oxygen, splinting injuries, bandaging injuries and administering CPR with or without an automated defibrillator.

With ALS service, responders must be certified paramedics. They are able to administer medication and fluids. They can use manual defibrillators and heart monitors. "It is much more advanced," said Lincoln, adding "many more people have survived the ride to South Shore Hospital than before."

Lincoln said 70 percent of the medical emergency calls the department responds to require ALS skills, whereas only 30 percent are non-life-threatening injuries such as broken wrists or ankles. "ALS is there for very good reason," he said.

Griffin pointed out because the town provides ALS service, the fees double that it can charge for those who use the ambulance. He said if the town went back to BLS service, not only would it affect the department's ability to adequately respond to emergencies "we'd lose between $100,000 to $125,000 in revenue."

Salaries make up the bulk of the fire department's budget. There are 25 positions accounted for in the fiscal 2007 budget, including the chief. Salaries, not including longevity pay, education, holiday pay, or overtime total $1,189,931. Griffin has recommended a $200,000 allocation for overtime.

The state requires there be two paramedics on the ambulance at all times. "We try for four men on duty at all times, but it's very difficult" said Lincoln, as there are often injuries or vacation days to be dealt with. When people are missing, overtime is required to ensure there are enough members on duty to run the ambulance and one fire truck. Griffin noted the town should pay attention to trends going forward, as the 55-plus housing developments which the town has planned typically increase the number of calls the department must respond to.

Griffin said he has been conducting research into the benchmarking figures provided by Municipal Benchmarking, LLC for the town, and he said while the numbers may indicate Cohasset pays more for its fire department than other towns, some phone calls have determined at least half of the other departments are primarily call forces, which means they have volunteers responding.

Lincoln said he remembers the days when Cohasset used to have 42 call members on the roster, but today, there are four currently on duty. "It's becoming more and more difficult to recruit people who want to get up at 3 a.m. and chase a fire engine," he said, adding call firefighters only respond to paged out box alarms, which are typically in buildings where a large number of people gather, such as a nursing home or a school.

Van drivers are needed at the Senior Center

The Cohasset Elder Affairs office is in need of volunteer van drivers. This is approximately a three-hour commitment each month on a day chosen by the volunteer. The CEA primarily uses a seven-passenger town van to transport seniors for shopping, visits to the library, to keep local appointments, for transportation to congregate meals, and other scheduled events. A valid Massachusetts driver's license is required. Experience driving an SUV or van is helpful, but not a requirement. Anyone interested in helping should call the CEA office Tuesdays, Thursdays, or Fridays at (781) 383-9112, or leave a message.

'I'm going to tell you what I believe'

Patrick addresses jobs, education, health care

By Lydia Crafts
CORRESPONDENT

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Deval Patrick promised creative leadership and a more trustworthy government to the crowd of about 50 South Shore residents who attended his speech last Wednesday night at Norwell High School.

"For too long, Democrats have been telling people what they want to hear," Patrick said. "I'm going to tell you what I believe."

A Chicago native and a Harvard Law School graduate who worked as Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights during the Clinton administration, Patrick announced his candidacy last spring, the first time he's ever run for political office.

He's campaigning against Bay State Attorney General Tom Reilly, among others, for the Democratic nomination.

In his hour-long address, Patrick discussed three issues he said he feels have the greatest impact on people's lives today: the economy, education and healthcare. The only way to make significant changes regarding these wide-ranging issues, Patrick said, is to think about the effects policies will have down the line. "We don't govern in terms of long term interest," he said, " because there's no political payoff."

STAFF PHOTOS/MARK GARDNER

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Deval Patrick answers questions from the floor during an event last Wednesday at Norwell High School.

Patrick said he believes the story of the American dream is a possibility and told more frequently in the United States than any other place on earth. On the other hand, he said he believes people are losing faith in opportunity because of bad leadership.

"We need a government that is what we are at our best," Patrick said. "Smart, efficient, pragmatic and compassionate."

Patrick said he agrees with Governor Romney's strategy of acting as the chief salesman to the state, and if elected, he would work with companies to demonstrate to them the benefits of investing in the government. Patrick said Romney has been a poor salesman for the state, though, because "he's using [Massachusetts] as his laughing line." Patrick also spoke about making capital more available to small businesses, and he wants it to be easier for new companies to gain permit approval. "Democrats need to get more comfortable with private economy," he said.

But while he promised to focus on improving the economy, Patrick said he plans to make education his number one priority.

"I know from my own life that education can be transforming," he said. Patrick said he envisions a "comprehensive" educational program, one that includes more spending on higher education, broader access to early education for children ages 3-4, longer school hours that are more compatible with the workday and the creation of a structure for young people that will prepare them for the increasing societal demands they face.

"Massachusetts' workforce comes from our public colleges," Patrick said. "Investing in higher education is an investment in our future."

Patrick emphasized too, the need for a new healthcare system.

"No one's happy with it," he said. "There needs to be healthcare that's decent, affordable, accessible and portable for every person in the state."

At the end of the speech, audience members peppered Patrick with questions about a wide range of issues.

Libby Bates, a member of the Pembroke Board of Assessors, expressed concern with local towns that are reducing benefits to the elderly because there is no reimbursement from the state. If elected, Patrick said he would increase local aid by guaranteeing a percentage of tax revenues to municipalities and through uncapping the lottery. Patrick urged residents to brainstorm ideas about how to increase local revenue, and he suggested that restaurants consider adding a percentage additional tax to meals to benefit the town. Patrick expanded on the current problems with the tax system, saying Romney's cuts to the income tax have only put pressure on the property tax to pay for services. In order to begin to improve the tax system, Patrick urged those in the audience to think about what combination of services are really necessary.

Sheikh Rahman, a Norwell resident, asked Patrick for his ideas on affordable solutions to improve the environment. Although Patrick offered no solution for how to control cost, he said his work in the oil industry has made him acutely aware of the "urgent need to break dependency on oil." Efforts to improve the environment have to take place at the state level, he added, because the federal government is not taking initiative. Patrick said he supports the Cape Wind project that's been proposed for the waters off Nantucket.

Bruce Burgess, Chairman of Norwell's recently formed Affordable Housing Partnership, asked Patrick about his plans to implement affordable housing in Bay State communities. Patrick said Massachusetts has lost population because of a shortage of affordable housing, and the main problem with the Chapter 40B plan stems from a lack of trust between state and local government. According to Patrick, the state needs to work with local authorities to make the permit approval process easier and give towns the confidence that the state government will help them deal with the potential impact that affordable housing has on their communities.

Brett Thomas, a student at Norwell High, asked Patrick if he had a strategy for furthering stem cell research. Patrick said he would like to invest bonds to assist the development of stem cell research and hopes to put money into public education facilities and faculty.

"If we get it right with technology, the whole world will be our customer," said Patrick.

In the weeks and months to come, Patrick said he plans to run a grassroots campaign, where he can have conversations with voters and give them an "idea of what's possible."

As the event drew to a close, the response from audience members was enthusiastic, and some attendees stood just to offer appreciation for what Patrick had to say.

"I'm writing a check for donation," said Grey Wolf of Hull.

Donna Brown, a guidance counselor at Silver Lake High School in Kingston said Patrick deals with issues that mean a lot to the families she works with at her school.

A selectman from Pembroke, Arthur Boyle described Patrick as "a different kind of politician."

"He has integrity and character," Boyle said. "He stands for something."

The event was hosted by the Norwell Democratic Town Committee, in conjunction with a number of similar groups on the South Shore.

access from the Town's sidewalk network to the Greenbush line.

• With respect to Mr. Grabuskas' legitimate issue of connectivity for a suburban trail system, we have agreed to assist by contacting appropriate people in Hingham and Scituate for the purpose of assisting in the creation of such a plan throughout the entire Greenbush corridor, near if not always adjacent to the line.

• In addition, since we brought two individuals who had been in a dialog with the 'T' for almost two years, the so called Greenbush Gang: Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan, we were therefore able to bring to the highest authority in the MBTA several issues which were most poignant and galling. According to their thank you letter to the 'T' they said:

The only portion lacking pedestrian connectivity is the last one-half mile or so from the intersection of Main Street and Forest Avenue to the Greenbush station. This is the distance that will be directly connected by a 12-foot wide Greenbush gravel service road. We had hoped that there was a way to create a design that would permit this road to serve the dual purpose of pedestrian access as well as MBTA needs. However, in our discussions with the Greenbush project team it became apparent that this was not an item open for discussion.

Consequently, we have applied for a Transportation Oriented Development grant which closed Nov. 14, 2005. The MBTA was kind enough to write a letter of endorsement for this grant request. This grant request will permit us to construct sidewalk to connect the end of our sidewalk to the Greenbush station. It is also interesting to note that the portion of this proposed sidewalk that does cross the Greenbush tracks did not have a pedestrian crossing as a part of the design. This is clearly different from the message your right of way people have given you. We were forced by the MBTA to spend $67,000 of our own mitigation funds to design and construct this pedestrian crossing. Otherwise, we would lose, forever, the opportunity to create a pedestrian crossing for access to the station. If we are fortunate enough to be awarded this grant, Cohasset will be reimbursed. If not, we are out these monies. We, like you, are not flush with funds and this will reduce the useful things we can accomplish with our mitigation funds.

And so, as the political process wends its way through the pathways of Federal, State and Town government, we all wait breathlessly for the outcome. Hopefully, some day, many of us will be able to walk to the new MBTA station.

Cohasset's Tim Toomey, pictured here in the Marshfield Tournament, has been a solid performer for the wrestling squad so far this season.

Grapplers search for glory

By Ben Libby
CORRESPONDENT

This year hasn't been one of Cohasset wrestling's best, but coach Torin Sweeney can't complain because his team is still in the thick of things.

With an 8-8 record, Cohasset is, according to Sweeney, "Right where we thought we would be as far as wins and losses. The kids are working hard."

Last Friday, Cohasset hosted a tri-meet featuring Rockland, Scituate and North Quincy. Although Cohasset lost all of its matches as a team, senior Shane Dorian had a good day, winning all three of his matches. Against a new and improved Scituate squad, Cohasset lost 36-22.

Following that match, Cohasset faced a strong Rockland team and lost 60-12. Finally, Cohasset hoped to sneak out of the gym with a win against NQ, but left with nothing, losing 15-54.

Next up on Tuesday was Marshfield, a squad that Cohasset most certainly could have beaten, but it just wasn't their day. Dave McKenna, Shane Dorian and Nick Cambi won, but the rest of the team struggled and Cohasset left Marshfield with a 52-18 loss.

After the loss, Sweeney commented on the teams progress so far, saying, "The team has done well as a whole and is improving, but we have a lot of work to do before sectionals and the team tourney."

Individually for the team, Dorian, Cambi, McKenna, and Ryan McLellan have been solid all year. Jake Watts, Adam Smith, Steve Manley, Tim Toomey, and George Miller have won key matches and are above .500 in terms of wins to loses. First year starters like Dave Toomey, Mike Frotu, Ross Collins-Wooley, Steve

Lady hoopsters flying high

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset lady hoopsters have found their rhythm just in time. After a shifty first half, the Skippers had strung together four big wins in a row heading into this week's action.

On Tuesday the 24th, the Falcons of Mashpee played host to a Skippers team and were hoping to avenge the Cohasset 12-point victory earlier in the season. Unfortunately for the Falcons, 12 points was not enough. After the game, the Mashpee team probably wished the Skippers' bus had never driven over the Sagamore Bridge.

From the get go, the Mashpee players, looking more like penguins than falcons, could not get their offense off the ground. The home team collapsed under Cohasset's press, which, by the way, is developing quite the reputation in the South Shore League.

Freshman Gabriella Flibotte contributed 20 points, while senior captain Chelsea Grossman added 13. Sam Lehr led the Skippers' rebounding charge; not an easy feat considering the Falcons' height advantage.

The 34-16 halftime Skipper lead swelled in the second half as Cohasset forced turnover after turnover. Falcon fans emptied from the stadium shaking their heads at the 66-27 final score.

"This win just verifies the girls' improvement," said head coach John Levangie. "The 27-point improvement upon our last meeting with Mashpee really shows the girls' offensive work has paid off."

The improvement and talent of the Skippers is becoming more and more obvious. But would it be enough to hold up against Avon on January 26th?

You bet. The fact that the Panthers were 9-0 in the Mayflower League did not rattle the Skippers one bit.

Once again, Cohasset came onto the court with a point to prove. The Panthers could not overcome the Skippers' flawless press.

Skaters still in postseason hunt

Holway, Davis (two goals each) and Wade (25 saves) lead Skippers to victory over Mashpee

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The first time Jonny Wade took the ice in between the pipes this season, it was his first game as a goaltender, period.

The Cohasset freshman has made strides with each game, culminating in perhaps his finest performance of the year in Wednesday night's 4-2 win over Mashpee.

With the Skippers offense getting off the a slow start in the first several minutes of the game, Wade kept the visiting Falcons off the board with some key saves. He kept it up for the full 45 minutes, stopping 25 of the 27 shots he saw to help lead his team to victory.

Wade, who had primarily played defenseman in the youth ranks, said after the game he feels a lot more comfortable in net now than he did in early December.

"It's been hard at times," Wade said of the transition. "But it's a pretty good feeling to know that the whole team is behind you."

Cohasset's rookie goalie was certainly not without help in Wednesday's victory. Defensemen Brandon Smith and Conor Holway played most of their shifts together, and it was easy to see why. A Smith/Holway combo gives Cohasset one of the best blue line pairings in the South Shore League.

What makes the duo more dangerous is that both are skilled offensive players, as well, and they combined on what turned out to be the game-winning goal with 3:55 left in the second period. After having his slapshot from the point saved, Smith regained control of the puck and fired it toward the net again. Holway was there to deflect it over the goalie's right shoulder, giving the Skippers the 3-1 lead.

Just 1:31 into the third, Holway made it 4-1. On his way out of the penalty box, the junior collected a pass from senior Mark Bouchard, skated down the left wing one-on-one with a Mashpee defenseman, and then went five-hole on the goalie.

Sophomore Charlie Czerkawski nearly scored off the ensuing face-off, only to have his breakaway attempt saved. Holway nearly got his hat trick at the 11:47 mark, but his monstrous blast from about 35 feet out skipped off the crossbar.

After an inauspicious beginning that featured little pressure on the Mashpee net, Cohasset got on the board 4:02 into the game on the first of two goals from junior Chris Davis. Davis doubled his tally just two minutes later, tipping in a hard slapshot from sophomore Alex Goetz. Holway also picked up an assist on the play to begin his three-point night.

All things considered, it wasn't the most convincing of victories, as the shots were nearly even (30-27 in favor of Cohasset). But that wasn't going to bother Skippers head coach Ben Virga.

"This is the first time in a while we've had an ugly win," he said. "We made some good plays, and we made some bad plays. Ugly wins are nice; it shows you're a good team and that you made the plays when you had to."

Playing well again was the "black line" of Davis, Goetz and junior T.J. Kennedy. The "red line" of Andrew Smith, Austin Lanzillotti and Brian Straughn kept consistent pressure in the Mashpee end during the second and third periods. Senior Dan Sullivan also played a solid game in defense.

Last Friday, the Skippers dropped a 7-4 decision to Harwich-Provincetown. Straughn scored a couple quick goals to stake Cohasset to a 2-0 lead, but HP stormed back with three of its own before the first intermission.

Memorable meet for Coh-Noh seniors

By Rachel Thomas
CORRESPONDENT

The senior gymnasts on the Cohasset-Norwell team competed in the last home meet of their high school career on Monday.

Although the team suffered an unfortunate 128.3-126.6 loss to Somerset High School, the meet was unforgettable to the entire team.

All of the team's seniors competed in at least three events. All-around competitors Erin Kelly and Lisa Spirito competed very well on floor, both obtaining scores of 8.2. The two other senior captains, CJ Himberg and Kate Carpenter, competed on bars, beam and floor.

The four captains all obtained impressive scores on beam with Kelly, Himberg, Carpenter and Spirito scoring 7.8, 8.0, 8.1, and 8.3 respectively.

Norwell juniors Melissa Murphy, Jamie Nichols and Kiersten Shontz also competed well on Monday, as coach Amy Maree was pleased with their performances in the meet.

"We were all very proud of Kiersten because she competed floor for only the second time in her career," she said. "Also, Melissa Murphy's three scores helped the team greatly."

Murphy earned scores of 7.4 on beam, and a 7.7 on vault and bars, while Cohasset's Corrina Durham scored a 7.5 on bars, 7.8 on floor and 7.9 on vault.

Additionally, Nichols and Norwell's Cassie Pacella both scored 7.3 on the vault.

As the end of the season draws near, the gymnasts find themselves with mixed feelings. They are extremely pleased with how the team has performed so far this season, but they also show feelings of sorrow as the senior captains' final meets approach.

The team will compete in an away meet against Carver tonight (7:30 start), which is predicted to be very close and enticing. Also, on Feb. 11, the Coh-Noh gymnasts will compete in the All-League meet, which includes all of the teams from the Cranberry League. The meet will take place at Somerset High School.

FROM HOOPSTERS, PAGE 17

Unfortunately for the Panthers, the word about Cohasset's press must not have made its way to the Mayflower League.

In the meantime, Flibotte led the team once again, this time with 18 points. Classmate Lehr followed with 14, while Grossman and senior captain Mia Lieb-Lappen contributed nine each.

"Right now, the general team attitude helps us along," said Grossman. "Once we realized we had the capability to win, we got more excited about each game. We feed off this energy and use it to play better."

With only eight games remaining, the Skippers realize the critical point in the season has arrived. Two more wins would earn the girls yet another spot in the MIAA tourney.

"The underclassmen, in particular, have really come along," said senior captain Katie James. "The mistakes they were making earlier disappear as they gain more experience."

After a few long weeks out with an ankle injury, James plans to return this week. Her leadership will prove crucial, especially if the Skippers advance to the postseason. Her return may give the team the lift they need to qualify for post season play.

Fans are keeping their fingers crossed that the hard-hitting Skipper press will remain intact as Cohasset begins a stretch of four games in five days tonight with a big home game against Carver. Tomorrow, the girls will travel to Nantucket, followed by home games Monday against Holbrook and Tuesday with Harwich.

Search for glory

Hurlburt and Gannon Dorian have done a nice job when called upon.

Looking ahead, Cohasset has Nauset on Saturday, with a win putting Cohasset in the Division 3 state tournament. Upon qualification, Cohasset can begin to prepare to defend the title they currently hold.

One thing is for sure, you can never count Cohasset out when it comes down to the postseason.

Boys travel hoops in East Bridgewater

Some call it "old school," some call it "outdated," but whatever you call it, the gym at East Bridgewater High School was the scene of great basketball action this past Saturday. Adorned with championship banners from the distant and recent past, this gym was the perfect setting for fast paced, nail biting action.

The sixers took to the court first, and the first half was a give and take for 14 minutes. Christian Allard ignited the offense in his usual fashion with quick, defensive hands creating offensive opportunities. The highlight was Allard dropping a three-pointer. Despite efforts from all in the first half, the boys in blue were down at the half.

The second half started with an energized EB team, converting fast break opportunities into points. EB was aggressive and it seemed that they might have the game in the bag. But never, ever, count the sixers out. A drive by Allard for two started the comeback.

Chris Lunde played superior defense, forcing an EB turnover that Jamie Faber converted to points. Pat Kearney stole the ball on the inbound pass, made the shot, was fouled and converted from the stripe for two. Cohasset was in the game.

Jay Salerno and Robbie Mahoney took over the paint, keeping EB from getting rebounds. Once again, it was the sixers' defense that got them back in the game. Faber was terrific, anticipating an EB pass and stealing the ball.

Pat MacCormack was fierce, ripping a board and executing a classic give and go with Faber for two. Danny Barnes set a textbook pick for Allard, allowing him to drive and score for two. Charlie Neaves kept the offensive motion under control with strong ball handling.

The Cohasset 1-2-2 defense had EB stymied. An EB turnover created a fastbreak for Allard who tied the game up. EB returned and scored. With only seconds left on the clock, Cohasset got the ball down court to MacCormack who let loose a beautiful, arcing ball that hit the rim, bounced and spun around the rim, and fell out. The score was 35-33 East Bridgwater, but Cohasset won on sheer determination, focus and desire.

Kelby Pontes - "KJ" to his friends and fans - let EB know that KJ was in the house. KJ started the action with a block that was felt all along the South Shore. He then was fouled and converted both shots to put Cohasset on the board. Cohasset was in control of the game.

Ben Campbell made a behind the back bounce pass look easy as he fed KJ for two again. Robert Jones stole the ball on defense and went coast to coast for a bucket. Gabe Seksay got in on the block shots, laying one on EB to prevent a score. Sam "Legs" Richardson stole the ball and fed Jones for two.

Justin Liburd was a defensive menace. He stole the ball several times with his quick hands and feet. Alex Harper and Jack Carrier were great under the boards. Derek Youngman and Mike Monaco kept the offense in check, directing and executing plays. Cohasset had a commanding lead at the half 27-11.

The second half was magic to watch. Eric Wasel was just great. It was all Wasel, all the time. Boxing out on defense to rip down rebounds, and great offensive positioning in the low post to score, Wasel was giving EB fits. When EB got his number, Harper and Liburd forced EB to focus on the perimeter with their quickness and anticipation. That freed up the low post again, and Carrier and Seksay played great. Campbell made passing look easy, as he effortlessly found the open man for a score. Cohasset won 51-18.

The 8's finished the action for Cohasset, winning the tip and Kevin O'Connell hit a jumper for the first points of the game. Robby McCunney delivered a resounding block, and then ripped the ball and went end to end for a bucket. Johnny Maher hit O'Connell again for another score. Brenden Doonan was fouled in the paint, made the bucket and the free throw to put Cohasset on top 12-7.

Dan Sullivan and Taylor MacQuade were tremendous in the low post, out rebounding the EB boys. Both converted offensive rebounds for points. Jodi Rosano drove to the basket for a bucket and was fouled. Just when EB thought they had Cohasset's inside game figured out, John Kearney hit a three-pointer that hit nothing but net.

Will Wise hit a couple of 12-foot jumpers. McCunney stole the ball and went coast to coast again for two, Maher hit for a three to extend the Cohasset lead to 42-33. Jeff Charles provided quick hands and feet, keeping the EB squad frazzled. Cohasset clearly controlled the game, the paint and the final outcome, winning easily 48-35.

Swimmers suffer first loss

By Caitlin Donovan
CORRESPONDENT

The Scituate-Cohasset swim team suffered its first loss of the season to Duxbury last Tuesday.

Although the Sci-Cohs lost, they put up some fierce competition. Coach Jon Fortin was very pleased with the results.

"We have so many personal best times and sectional qualifying times, as well as state qualifying times," he said. "Plus, if the girls 400 free relay hadn't been disqualified at the end of the meet, their time of 4:04.50 is under the state qualifying time by four seconds, and that is a seven second difference between their time from the Randolph meet."

The final score of the meet was extremely close with the Sci-Coh girls scoring 87 points and the Duxbury girls finishing with 98. The boys meet was even closer, as they dropped a narrow 87-84 decision.

Needless to say, the effort put forth by both the girls and boys of the Sci-Coh swim team was phenomenal and the team looks poised to rake in more wins in the future.

Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club in the home stretch

Hoop season in Cohasset is in full swing with action in the school gyms every weekend.

The Recreation program is fielding several teams of boys and girls Grades 1-8. The action starts every Saturday at 8 a.m. at each school. Over 300 kids participate in the Town Rec program. Dedicated volunteer coaches and parents make this program a success.

Our middle school travel programs are in great shape, fielding 11 teams between the boys and girls, up from six teams two years ago. The boys play in the competitive Patriot League and the girls play in South Shore League. Check out the boys action this Saturday Feb. 4, at 1 p.m. The 6th graders tip off at 1 p.m. followed by the 7th and 8th grade boys at the CMHS gym. The girls play on Sunday, Feb. 5 at 1 p.m. The 5th graders start the action at 1 p.m., followed by grades 6-8.

The Varsity teams are fast approaching the end of their seasons. Catch great hoop action and bring the kids for a fun night. The boys next play at home on Friday Feb. 10 at 6:30 versus our arch rival Hull. They are at home again on Feb. 13, and then they travel to Norwell on Feb. 14. Come cheer on the boys and have a great night of fun. All games start at 6:30.

The girls varsity is tearing up the court, and you can catch their action tonight at 6:30 at the CMHS gym. The girls are also at home on Monday, Feb. 6 and Tuesday; gametime is 6:30.

The CBBC, behind the scenes, has been instrumental in garnering ever increasing interest in the game of hoop in Cohasset. From sponsoring a night with the Harlem Rockets in December, to promotional nights during the Varsity games, the Boosters are dedicated to making basketball a fun, family activity, as well as building a program that will be competitive at the high school level.

Check out all Cohasset hoop action and schedules at www.cohassetbasketball.com. The CBBC is looking for additional spirited, dedicated members to help us take basketball to the next level in Cohasset. Contact us through the website.

It stayed 3-2 until the opening minute of the third, when Lanzillotti tied things up. HP, however, scored another quick trifecta to make it 6-3. Bouchard got one back for the Skippers, but it wasn't enough, as the Rough Riders scored an empty-netter as time was expiring to account for the final score.

So Cohasset finds itself today with a 5-7-2 record heading into two critical league games in the next week of action. Tomorrow at Pilgrim, the Skippers face off against Hull at 3:20 p.m. Wednesday night, Cohasset hosts Abington-East Bridgewater in a game between two teams on the bubble for state tournament qualification.

Cohasset beat both teams in its first trip through the league schedule, and should they do so again, the Skippers would be back at .500 heading into the Feb. 11 showdown with league-leading Norwell. Against the Clippers on Jan. 18, Cohasset out-shot and outplayed Norwell, but still came out on the short end of a 3-0 score.

Brandon Smith said after the Mashpee game that he and his teammates will be confident going into the rematch.

"We know that we can beat Norwell," he said. "We just have to take better advantage of our opportunities. We've been doing a better job of that lately, and we need to keep it up."

GIRLS TRAVEL BASKETBALL

Eighth graders coast past Duxbury, 37-19

The 8th grade girls hoop team tipped off against Duxbury on Jan. 22 for the second time this season. The results were the same, with the hoopsters winning again, this time by a margin of 37-19.

Like many of the games this year, the V-8 girls started out very slowly and had difficulty scoring early. This tendency to start slowly was compounded by very tight officiating that saw 24 fouls called in the first half alone.

However, after the break Cohasset was able to pick up the pace (only 14 fouls were called) and pull away with a relatively easy victory. Everybody contributed to the win. Lindsay Allard led the scoring with 11 points (nine on free throws), Tori Lehr poured in eight, Meredith Kelly tossed in seven, and Isabelle Franklin added five.

Lucy Noble was like Bill Russell on the boards pulling down 12 rebounds. Erin Fontaine found seams in the zone and hit two key jump shots, while Mimi Mahoney and Samantha Crough again efficiently directed the Super Eight offense from the guard spots.

Two big wins for 7th graders over Duxbury and Halifax

The Cohasset 7th grade travel team turned in the best back-to-back performances of their two and a half years together with pulsating victories over Duxbury two weeks ago and Halifax this past Sunday.

Duxbury, the defending league champion which was tied for first place entering the game, had defeated Cohasset in their first meeting two weeks before Christmas. Cohasset fell behind early in that contest, fought back to take the lead with two minutes to go, but eventually ended up on the short end of a 17-11 decision.

However, in the rematch the Blue & White came out roaring from the start thanks to a balanced scoring attack which saw six Cohasset girls tingle the twine for a 14-6 lead at the half. On the other end, the Cohasset 2-3 zone defense was flawless, limiting Duxbury to long-range outside shooting and few offensive rebounds for second chance opportunities.

Cohasset continued to step on the throttle after the break, led by Carli Haggerty. Haggerty (game-high 14 points) went on an offensive tear, dropping in 10 points on a variety of moves to the hoop and short-range shots. With the Blue & White continuing to play solid defense, the Seven-Ups enlarged their lead to a commanding 24-8 margin with six minutes to go.

Although Duxbury narrowed the gap down the stretch thanks to good free throw shooting and a three point hoop at the end, the Cohasset lead never was seriously threatened and the Blue & White came away with a 30-25 win to knock the visitors out of first place.

The Halifax game this Sunday proved to be one of the most exhilarating wins ever for the Seven-Ups (matched only by their last-second win over Rockland last season). Halifax is one of the most improved teams in the league and battled Cohasset all the way in a hard-fought 26-18 Blue & White victory earlier in the season at Halifax. The rematch had playoff implications, with Halifax needing a win to move into a tie with Cohasset in the standings.

Halifax came out in a full-court, man-to-man press which proved bothersome for the Cohasset offense. Although the Halifax girls were whistled into the penalty situation within six minutes of the start of the game, their aggressive tactics had the effect of frustrating the Blue & White offense. Both teams then settled into a battle of 2-3 zone defenses. The Cohasset girls were unable to find their rhythm and the result was a 12-8 Halifax edge at the half.

So how do you get your team to pick up the tempo? You tell them to "get after" the opposition, and Cohasset turned the tables at the start of the second half by instituting their own man-to-man press all over the court. The result was a number of Halifax turnovers which led to Cohasset scoring opportunities. Buckets by Emma Musto, Lindsay Davis, and Haggerty soon drew Cohasset even at 14-14. Another hoop by Haggerty and three-of-four foul shots by French gave the Blue & White a 19-16 edge.

However, Halifax would not go down without a fight, and scored two quick buckets to regain the lead, 20-19. At that point Davis stepped up on the offensive front, giving the momentum back to Cohasset with a bucket, two free throws, and another hoop to propel the Blue & White into a 25-20 advantage.

Cohasset (which by now was in the penalty situation) then went back into its 2-3 zone and effectively stifled any chance of a Halifax comeback bid. The Seven-Ups closed out the big win with a hoop by French and two free throws by Caroline Fein for the 32-24 final score (Halifax hit a three pointer at the buzzer to bring the final margin under double digits).

The victory was a total team effort for the Cohasset Sevens. In addition to the scoring of Davis (10 points) and French (nine points), the Blue & White received five points from Haggerty and a bucket from Amy Costa. The backcourt tandem of Emma Quigley and Rachel Fredey directed the Cohasset scoring attack with a near-flawless passing game, while Carly Martin as always was a forceful presence under the boards with her defense and rebounding.

What was most satisfying for the Cohasset squad was the key element of their improved free throw shooting. Last year the girls shot about 20 percent from the free throw line, a shortcoming that proved costly in many close defeats. However, against Halifax the Seven-Ups sank 10-of-16 from the charity stripe (a percentage of 62.5%), while Halifax made good on only 1-of- 9 attempts. With a strong emphasis by the coaches on free throw shooting, the Cohasset Sevens have been shooting at about the 50 percent mark from the charity stripe this season.

Win, lose and a close call for combined 5th-6th team

The combined 5th and 6th grade travel team has shown vast improvement over the last three games with their record now standing at 2- 2. In the Saturday game vs Norwell the depleted squad of seven 56ers took on the 12-girl squad of their opponents.

In the first half the Blue & White looked solid. The team's leading scorer, Kayla Orner, kept up her pace with six points in the first half, while Scarlett McQuade and Whitney Jaffe also filled the net. The unheralded Allison Whelan did some tough offensive and defensive rebounding, one of the keys to keeping this contest close throughout most of the first half. Once again the guard play of Mariel Teague, Elizabeth Hagearty and Meghan Kearney was solid, moving the ball through the tough press of Norwell.

But Team 56 was trailing 14-10 with two minutes to go in the first half, and up until this point in the game, Cohasset's aggressive defense was clearly slowing down their opponents. But Norwell surprised the 56ers with a full court press and scored six unanswered points, running the halftime score to 20-10.

In spite of this the 7-player squad did not give up. They came out in the second half and closed the gap, trailing 26-20 with eight minutes remaining. But fatigue set in down the stretch and Norwell won this contest 36-20.

The second contest of the weekend was against Hanover. Both teams carried an eight-player squad. Cohasset dominated the boards, led by Annie Robinson and McQuade pulling down rebound after rebound, which created two or three shots per trip for the 56ers. Teague ran the offense flawlessly with crisp passing and slick dribbling through Hanover's center court press.

The scoring trio of Orner, Jaffe, and McQuade kept pace with Hanover throughout the game. But in spite of outshooting Hanover, Team 56 found themselves down 17-14 with 30 seconds to go. Who better to take control of the game but Orner, as she raced down the court and fired up a three pointer…It's good! However the referee awarded Orner only two points, giving Team 56 a 17-16 loss. Ouch!

The following weekend pit the Blue & White vs. Scituate. The team once again played shorthanded with a 7-girl squad facing the 11-player Scituate squad. But this game highlighted the return of center Julia Thompson, adding another scrappy player to this already tough defensive unit.

The seven-player squad did not disappoint the Cohasset fans by stealing this show from Scituate. Jaffe played outstanding two way ball with her stealing and diving, smothering Scituate on both ends of the court. Adding to this defensive struggle were the countless blocked shots by Thompson and tough defensive pressure on the ball by Hagearty and Courtney Monroe.

The offense was spread around to five players this game, led by "Three Point" Orner, followed by Jaffe and McQuade, Robinson and Hagearty. The most thrilling baskets came from the following three 56 players: First, Robinson hit on a great outside bank shot from the left side to tie the score at that point. Second, Orner hits a three pointer late in the game to tie the score. Third, the highlight of highlights came from Elizabeth Hagearty, who fired up a shot under extreme pressure, missed, but followed up the shot and was fouled on the second attempt.

The ref, who let the teams play most of the game, finally called a foul on Scituate, putting Hagearty at the line. Elizabeth stepped up big time, sinking the front end of her free throws to put Cohasset ahead for good. Team 56 added a last second basket to put an exclamation point on this exciting effort, giving them a 16-13 win.

Limited space left for spring lacrosse

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has completed its spring registration period, but a limited number of roster spaces remain available at some age levels.

"We've been lucky to come through our registration period with just about our preferred roster sizes at all levels," says Chuck Jaffe, director of the program, which will field 14 boys and girls teams in grades 3-8 this spring. "We have just a few open spaces, and we will give them out on a first-come, first-served basis."

Jaffe notes that the lacrosse organization starts practices in early March and, each year, winds up with a few children who only decide that they want to play after a friend tells them about the start of workouts. Typically, at that point, it is too late to add the additional kids at that time.

"This year, more than most, we may have some extra flexibility – particularly on the boys side of things," Jaffe says, "but ideally we will have everyone who wants to play signed up soon, before they wind up missing out."

Registration costs $150 for one player and $275 for two. Cohasset Youth Lacrosse begins practicing in March, completes its season in June and works throughout the spring to avoid scheduling conflicts with the other youth sports in town.

To get registration paperwork, contact Jaffe at CAJaffe@aol.com or at 781-383-9858.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse looking for coaches

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse is looking for volunteer assistant coaches at all levels for its spring season. Cohasset will field 14 teams this spring - for boys and girls in grades 3-8 - a number large enough to stretch the available coaching staff thin.

For the first time in several seasons, the shortage of coaches is a problem with the boys program, and not just the younger, emerging girls teams. Cohasset Youth Lacrosse currently has head coaches at all age levels, but with roughly 300 children spread throughout the program this year, increasing the size of coaching staffs is essential for player development.

Throughout its history, the foundation of the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse coaching staff has been volunteers who do not have children on the teams involved. In seeking additional coaches, the program is hoping to get both community volunteers and parents whose children will play. Experience playing or coaching the game is desired, but not necessary; coaches must be able to throw and catch with a lacrosse stick in order to teach others and facilitate drills.

At all but the youngest age levels, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse holds two practices each week, and has games on Sunday afternoon. The youngest boys and girls have one weekly practice, which is held on the weekend. Assistant coaches are not expected to attend every event, although they should be able to appear often enough to be perceived by the players as a team leader.

In addition to coaches, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse is interested in developing referees who can work its games. Interested individuals will be required to take some officiating instruction classes during the winter, and may then be eligible to work games either with a partner or solo in the spring.

For more information or to express your interest in coaching or officiating, call Chuck Jaffe, coordinator of youth lacrosse, at 781-383-9858, or write him at CAJaffe@aol.com.

Osgood murals honor Rosa Parks' legacy

The second-grade artists of the Joseph Osgood School created murals in honor of Rosa Parks called "With Liberty and Justice for All." Coordinating with their social studies "Justice" curriculum, Miss Diminnie, the Library teacher, read the book "Rosa" by Nikki Giovanni to the second-grade students. Following the story, the students made lists of words to describe Rosa Parks to be used in their art murals.

In the art room with Mrs. Ogden, the students drew portraits, wrote descriptive words in calligraphy, made colorful borders and cut out multi-cultural hands. The second-grade artists then combined them together to create thoughtful murals. During Black History month, these murals will be on display in the second grade corridor.

Character education — Thanks to Osgood Character Education Committee members Kay Slater, Selene Eymer, Cindy Schubert and Jenny Consadine for organizing "Brunch with Bob" on Jan. 24. Adjustment counselor Bob LeCount led an interesting discussion on the topic of "The Friendship Factor" with 40 parents! The committee received excellent feedback and parents are looking forward to the next "get together" on March 7th. The topic of discussion will be "Talking Safety".

Mrs. Tritto's students Conor Naughton, Malachi Nelson, Ethan Avotins and Riley Mahoney stand by the Rosa Parks mural at the Osgood School.

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

MAKING SENSE OF YOUR SUMMER CAMP SEARCH: WHAT TYPES OF CAMPS ARE REALLY OUT THERE?

Essential Camp Terms

By Bette Bussel, Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

Overnight or Residential Camp is generally for children ages 7 to 15. Some camps serve children as young as 6, others serve campers up to age 17. Children may live one to eight weeks and sleep in bunks, cabins, tents, teepees or yurts. Parents should make sure that their child has had the experience of sleeping away from home before enrolling them in an overnight camp.

Day Camps generally serve children ages 5 to 15. Some camps serve children as young as 3. Many welcome campers up to age 17. As the name implies, children stay at the camp during the day, but return home at night. Common session lengths are one, two, four and eight weeks. Some offer extended day options before and after camp.

Specialty Camps and Specialty Programs at General Day and Overnight Camps allow the camper to focus on one specific area of interest, such as fine & performing arts, horseback riding, computers, sports or adventure. Some specialty camps focus on a specific clientele such as children with special needs.

Kosher-certified camps offer various levels of formal and informal religious education. Specialty programs at general camp offer like opportunities for those in general within a general camp setting.

OBITUARIES

Eleanor Cooney Smith

Retired library director

On a snowy day, Eleanor Cooney Smith, then in her mid-80s, hops on her cross-country skis to get to her mailbox.

Eleanor (Trowt) Cooney Smith, 93, of Cohasset died Jan. 26, 2006, peacefully at her home.

Born in Wenham, Mrs. Smith graduated from Beverly High School and received her B.S. degree in library science from Simmons College.

She worked in the libraries of Amherst and Littleton, N.H., Scituate and Cohasset, prior to working in the Weymouth library system for 25 years, where she served as library director for many years until her retirement in 1976. During her tenure, a new main library building and two new branch library buildings were constructed. She initiated many programs to expand the traditional role of the library to better serve the different needs and interests of the public.

She was active in the Massachusetts Library Association, and was a past president of the Old Colony Chapter. Upon her retirement, a proclamation from the governor honored her public service.

Mrs. Smith was a resident of Cohasset for 63 years, moving there in 1943 with her husband, Wilfred Cooney.

She became familiar with the town while working with the late Charlotte Tower, head librarian of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

She was involved in many civic and volunteer organizations, including the Cohasset Social Service League and Now, Fish, Shine (for the Landfill Study Committee). She was active in Simmons South Shore Alumnae Club, Hingham Poetry Group, Bare Cove Investment Group and was a member of the Second Congregational Church.

Mrs. Smith loved the natural beauty of Cohasset, particularly of the wooded property where she lived. In 2005, she placed a conservation restriction on her property to preserve the native holly trees and lady's slippers that grow there.

Wife of the late Wilfred O. Cooney and the late Chester W. Smith, she leaves three daughters, Nancy Cooney of Boston, Carolyn Cooney and her husband Darrell Bird of Milford and Christine Cooney and her husband Peter Black of Sherborn; a sister, Doris (Trowt) Eldredge of Orleans; two granddaughters, Julia Bird and Justine Black; and many stepchildren; step-grandchildren; and step-great-grandchildren. She was sister of the late William A. Trowt Jr., George B. Trowt, Barbara (Trowt) Lindberg and Franklin Trowt.

A Memorial Service will be held at 2 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 5, at the Second Congregational Church, Cohasset Commons.

Visiting hours are omitted

Arrangements are by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial gifts may be made to the Tufts Library, 46 Broad St., Weymouth 02188, or the Social Service League of Cohasset, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, 02025.

IT'S HAPPENING

Garage dance

There will be a Dance at the Garage on Friday, Feb. 10, from 7 to 10 p.m. for all sixth through eighth graders.

There will be a door charge of $5 per person and snacks and refreshments will be on sale.

Historical Society Spring Lecture Series

The Cohasset Historical Society begins its spring lecture series Wednesday, Feb. 15 with a talk by Steve Bobo on the "History of Our Harbor." All programs are held at the society's headquarters in the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., Cohasset, at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free and open to the public. Light refreshments will be served.

From the fishing schooners of the 19th century to the 20th century luxury yachts, Cohasset Harbor's waters hold many stories of the changes that affected the economy and lifestyle in this quiet little seaside town. Bobo, who has a life long affection for maritime history, shares some stories and their relationship to the town and its people.

Other programs planned for the series include a discussion of the mackerel fishing industry with Susan Playfair on April 19, and a talk on courtship and marriage in the post-revolutionary war generation by Tim Kenslea on May 17.

Reception planned for weathervane unveiling

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold a reception to celebrate the unveiling of its newly-completed weathervane on Sunday, Feb. 5, from 2 to 4 p.m., at the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., Cohasset. After a short program, light refreshments will be served.

The vane, a copper replica of a Colonial Pinky, was created by Steve Bobo, an artistic and creative builder of boats, large and small. It is modeled after the post revolutionary war schooner, "Fame," a privateer, built in Essex, and used in the War of 1812. Once installed on the cupola of the Pratt Building, it will serve as a visible reminder of Cohasset's maritime past.

Teen driving program

Concerned parents of teens, members of the Cohasset Police Department and staff from the advanced driver's training program, In Control ADT will be on hand Wednesday, Feb. 8 at 7p.m. to discuss the issue of teen drivers' safety and talk about solutions to combat the epidemic of teen car accidents. The meeting is open to the public and will take place at the Cohasset Middle High School. In Control ADT runs an intensive, hands-on driving program at the former Naval Air Station in South Weymouth.

According to the National Highway and Safety Administration, driving accidents are the number one cause of death among teenagers and 43 percent of first year Massachusetts drivers will be involved in a car crash. The In Control ADT program helps make the roads safer for all drivers and teaches the community's newest drivers how to avoid and handle all types of driving situations. For More information on In Control ADT, call 888-301-SAFE.

In Control ADT, founded in 2002, is an extreme driver training course designed to not only teach participants the appropriate way to respond to unavoidable, real-life road situations, but to also instill lifelong attitudes that make safer drivers.

Romantic organ music

As part of its Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church, 16 Highland St., Cohasset, will present David Macfarlane in an organ recital on Feb. 12 at 3 p.m. Dr. Macfarlane is a prize-winner in the National Competition in Organ Improvisation and Director of Music at First Presbyterian Church, Englewood, N.J. Macfarlane has played for the Papal Mass in New York City and a number of recitals at St. Peter's Basilica in Rome. He is an expert in romantic and contemporary works for the organ and will present compositions in those areas. Macfarlane will play on St. Stephen's magnificent 58-rank Aeolian-Skinner organ, known for its tonal diversity and size, with pipe placement at various locations within the church nave and chancel. Admission is free but donations will be accepted. For information call 781.383.1083.

DESTINATIONS

Aspen is better

By GAYLE FEE

ASPEN, Colo. -- It may have been the altitude, but as I stood at the summit of Ajax I succumbed to the hype. Aspen, I declared, is better. The sky is bluer! The snow is fluffier! The sun is shinier (an average of 300 good tanning days a year!). The bistros are trendier. The shops are ritzier. And, yes, it's true, the Beautiful People are, in fact, more beautiful!

It's "Lifestyles of the Rich & Famous" on snow. Look, there's Jack Nicholson schussing down Ruthie's Run! There's Mischa Barton sipping hot cocoa in the lobby of the Little Nell! It's Mariah Carey hitting the shops on Main Street! Seal and Heidi! Goldie and Kurt! Will and Jada! Jerry Seinfeld!

You get the picture. So much of Aspen's allure is the celebrity shoulder-rubbing and during the winter months there's no telling which famous faces you'll encounter on the Silver Queen gondola.

"Celebrities love it here because no one bothers them," said Aspen/Snowmass spokeswoman Kristen Rust.

Most longtime Aspenites take pride in being far too sophisticated to gawk. And most of the ultra-rich newcomers to Colorado's chicest outpost could buy and sell the celebs a hundred times over, anyway. But the former mining town still attracts thousands of more run-of-the-mill visitors every year eager to ski -- and party -- with the stars.

And ski. The presence of Kate Moss, Kevin Costner and Sharon Osbourne shouldn't discourage serious skiers. Despite the plethora of fur and Fendi, Aspen remains the ultimate alpine experience -- an Olympic-caliber village surrounded by four fab mountains with everything from kiddie slopes to the 40-degree, 1,500-vertical-foot Highland Bowl atop Aspen Highlands.

Buttermilk is the beginners hill. Even though ski bunnies such as "The O.C.'s" Mischa Barton and Heidi Klum hit the slopes there, Buttermilk is also home to one of the hottest extreme-sports competitions -- ESPN's Winter X Games (Jan. 28-31) -- and its terrain park is two miles of mind-boggling jumps, rails and boxes.

If Buttermilk is the novice hill, Aspen Highlands is the experts' playground. The extreme terrain encompasses leg-burning steeps, thrilling powder runs and the Highland Bowl -- a north-facing slope accessible only by hiking. But if hoofing it isn't on your agenda, the new Deep Temerity lift accesses an alternate 1,000 vertical feet and 180 acres of extreme terrain for the first time this season.

Aspen the mountain -- Ajax to locals -- soars 3,000 feet up from the village and boasts some of the longest, steepest, top-to-bottom runs in the West. If you're lucky, a savvy local might point out the powder stashes on Trainor Ridge. And if some star-gazing is in order, head for Bonnie's Restaurant mid-mountain or just soak in the panoramic views from The Sundeck at the top of Ajax.

Snowmass is the biggest of the four mountains. Spread over 3,100 acres, it has an embarrassment of riches terrainwise not to mention the longest lift-served vertical rise (4,406 feet) in the United States. Ski magazine ranked Snowmass No. 4 on its list of the Top 50 ski resorts because of its "vast, varied mountain."

"Snowmass unfairly has a rep as an intermediate mountain," said Rust. "But in reality, it has more expert slopes than the other three combined."

Extreme skiers will love the heart-pounding steeps in Hanging Valley and the Cirque. The adults and the ski racers in our group were partial to the full-throttle cruisers off the Big Burn and Coney Glade lifts. Not to be missed is the First Tracks program that allows early-risers to be the first to carve up freshly laid corduroy or plow through new powder on Snowmass and Aspen mountains. Just sign up in advance, it's free and fantastic.

Our family of four, including two teenagers, spent a week in

The Little Nell

The Crestwood, a 125-unit slopeside complex at the base of Snowmass. ResortQuest (www.resortquest.com) has one-, two- and three-bedroom, fully equipped condos beginning at $179 a night -- a bargain for ski-in, ski-out convenience!

Snowmass' base village -- a warren of shops, restaurants and entertainment -- has suffered by comparison to Aspen's glamour. But there are a few great dining spots that are worth a stop -- Artisan in the Stonebridge Inn, Krablooniks for wild game and Butch's Lobster Bar.

At the end of February, Snowmass will celebrate Mardi Gras, an event begun here by some New Orleans natives who came to Colorado to escape the Bourbon Street madness. The event features a parade and bead toss, a wild Mardi Gras ball, all-day -- and night -- partying and a not-for-the-faint-of-calf-muscles uphill race, the Mother of All Ascensions, that goes 1,700 feet up the mountain.

Construction has begun on a new Snowmass base village that will include 11 restaurants and bars, a 25,000-square-foot kids center, two hotels (one a Westin, the other a sister to the Little Nell in Aspen village), an aqua center and a high-speed gondola. (A new base six-pack debuted this year.) When all is said and done (in 2011) there will be little reason to leave Snowmass and make the 15-minute drive up Route 84 to Aspen. But you will. Because while the skiing is great at Snowmass, the party's in Aspen.

The village has scores of five-star caliber restaurants. We loved the sushi at Kenichi, the truffle oil french fries at the Ajax Tavern (yes, that was CNBC's Donnie Deutsch at the next table) and the elk loin au poivre at Todd English's Olives in the swish St. Regis hotel.

For the ultimate in decadence, be sure to max out the credit card at the Montagna in the Little Nell. Chef Ryan Hardy, who came to Aspen from the Harborview Hotel in Martha's Vineyard, is serving up delectable American contemporary cuisine. His cheese sampler is not to be missed -- especially if you accompany it with a glass of chilled bubbly from the champagne cart the waiter will wheel to your table.

Skiing at Snowmass

Non-skiers will love the Aspen street scene, the incomparable shopping for Prada, Gucci, Chanel, et al., and celebrity gawking in the lobby of the Little Nell.

And another incentive to visit: In March, the U.S. Comedy Arts Festival returns to Aspen for its 12th year. The event, featuring live comedy performances, sketch shows, a comedic film competition and hobnobbing with some of the biggest names in the entertainment biz, will honor Aspenite Goldie Hawn with its AFI Star Award. Sitcom king James Burrows, who brought iconic entertainment such as the "Mary Tyler Moore Show," "Cheers" and "Friends" to TV will accept the USCAF Career Tribute. Other programming during the March 8-12 fest includes a tribute to the "The Larry Sanders Show" featuring Garry Shandling and Jeffrey Tambor; Jim Henson's Puppet Improv from the late Muppetmeisters troupe; and a salute to "Def Comedy Jam."

As I packed to depart, I began to despair over the prospect of spending the rest of the winter commuting to New Hampshire. Would it spoil some vast eternal plan if I were a wealthy Aspenite????

Dinner theater returns to Raffael's

"Misgivings."

Quincy-based entertainment presenter JM Productions and Raffael's of Hull and Walpole recently reunited to present dinner theater this month, in March and April at Raffael's Nantasket in Hull. South Shore dinner theater fans will recall that JM Productions produced shows at Raffael's former location in North Quincy for many years.

"Everywhere I go, from the T to the supermarket, people stop me and ask when we will be back at Raffael's," explains JM's Founder and Producing DIrector John F. McDonald, Jr. "I'm delighted to finally be able to answer those questions and to let people know that we'll be back at the new Raffael's Nantasket for these special shows."

Dave Kane will open the new series Feb. 17 with "Misgivings." Kane — a local radio personality, comedian, and actor — plays a quick-witted, Irish Catholic priest who shares anecdotes, jokes and one-liners on growing up Catholic.

"Connie, Brenda, Patsy & Me"

The musical revue "Connie, Brenda, Patsy & Me" proved so popular in North Quincy that JM Productions will present the tribute show in Hull on March 17. "Connie, Brenda, Patsy & Me" is a combination of the sounds and styles of Connie Francis, Patsy Cline and Brenda Lee. The music of these three legendary ladies fills an evening headlined by local favorite Sheila Fahey of Neponset. Fahey has added the "Me" component so she can incorporate other artists who have influenced her throughout her years as a performer. Fahey is joined on stage by four talented back-up singers. With the show scheduled for St. Patrick's Day, Fahey and company also plan a sing-along that promises to keep Irish eyes a smiling!

Bandstand Revue

Popular fixtures on the Southern New England music scene since 1979, Bandstand Revue — complete with a special Elvis Presley tribute — comes to Raffael's Nantasket on April 21 with a play list covering swing and standards from the 40's right up to the 70s. Whether it's doo-wop, rhythm and blues, British invasion or Motown soul, the Bandstand Revue will be playing it in Hull.

Raffael's Nantasket and JM Productions are offering three dinner theatre packages as well as show only tickets, in addition to a overnight package with the Clarion hotel. Groups of 20 or more may contact us for special group rates. For tickets or additional information call JM Productions at 617- 786 -7469 or Raffael's at 781-925-4515 or visit www.jmproductionspresents.com or www.raffaels.com.

First ladies coming to Norwell

Tea for Three on stage at Company Theatre

Emmy Award-winning actress Elaine Bromka has played a host of memorable women, from Macaulay Culkin's mother in the 1989 feature film "Uncle Buck" and Miranda's gynecologist on HBO's "Sex and the City," to uber-heroine Marlena's unhinged kidnapper Stella on NBC-TV's "Days of Our Lives." Next week in Norwell, however, Bromka moves from fictional females to first ladies when she stars in "Tea for Three: Lady Bird, Pat and Betty" at the Company Theatre. Written by Bromka and Eric H. Weinberger, the play offers intimate portraits of Lady Bird Johnson, Betty Ford and Pat Nixon. The inspiration for the show came to Bromka a few years back while she was touring in "The Presidents," with Rich Little, and playing eight first ladies from Jacqueline Kennedy to Hillary Clinton.

"I realized I wanted to tell the story from their point of view. These were women of intelligence and determination who suddenly found themselves in a fishbowl," Bromka explained last week by telephone from her home in Montclair, N.J. "Pat Nixon once described it as 'the hardest unpaid job in the world.' "

After two years of her own research, including reading extensively and viewing videotapes of the three women to study their body language and how each spoke, Bromka was introduced to playwright Weinberger and the pair decided to collaborate.

"The more I learned about our recent first ladies, the more I was taken with their strengths. I found out that five out of eight them lost at least one parent while she was still a child. II knew whatever I did I had to involve the audience emotionally. It was thanks to Eric's genius that we decided to focus on these three particular women whose times in the White House were back to back. It allowed us to have them talk about and look forward to each other. We've also woven the history of the times into the story without getting preachy. It's a history lesson put in an engaging People magazine context."

The piece may be a one-woman show, but Bromka — who won her New England Emmy Award for her work on the 1970s WCVB-TV children's series "Catch a Rainbow" — is quick to point out that it is about three very different characters.

"The political leanings of each of these women affect the play for sure but we poke fun in both political directions. I'm crazy about all three of these ladies. Lady Bird Johnson is just so intelligent and such a good businesswoman but she is also a 'stand-by-your-man' kind of woman, too. In many ways, Betty Ford is the classic good-time gal. She was also, however, highly intelligent and unafraid to speak her mind. And Pat Nixon is so very different from her public persona. People called her 'Plastic Pat,' but she was anything but plastic. It was Pat Nixon's loneliness that first drew me to this project. Pat Nixon hated the limelight. She just wanted to gather the wagons around her family. She was an introvert caught in circumstances she never saw coming. She went through a great deal and still managed to be one of the kindest first ladies in history."

Elaine Bromka will perform "Tea for Three: Lady Bird, Pat and Betty," at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell Saturday, Feb. 11. For tickets and information, call 781-871-2787 or visit www.companytheatre.com.

THE BEHIND-THE-EAR INSTRUMENT

In the minds of many, a behind-the-ear (BTE) hearing instrument is a hearing instrument in its classic form. Before the newer generation of in-the-ear and in-the-canal hearing instruments, BTE instruments were the standard. Today, they remain a viable option for those considering the purchase of a hearing instrument. BTE instruments are housed in a curved case that fits neatly and comfortably behind, or over, the ear. A custom ear mold, made to the exact shape of the ear, is used to direct the sound from the hearing aid into the ear and to secure the hearing instrument in place. People with a wide range of hearing losses, from mild to severe, can be fitted with behind-the-ear hearing aids.

Today, there are more choices than ever before for consumers purchasing hearing aids. How do you decide which is the right one for you? The best way is to place your trust in the hands of a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist with a reputation for skill, knowledge, compassion, and integrity. We believe you'll find this at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, where you can begin with a free hearing test to determine how we can best meet your needs. PH: 781-337-1144. Visit us on the web at www.familyhearing.net.

P.S. Because the components of a behind-the-ear hearing instrument are housed outside the device, their controls are the most accessible.

Harbor health news alarming

Study issued by committee

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Lobsters are dying in the harbor. Boats by the yacht club are seeing rapid deterioration of galvanized chain. Beaches are being closed during the summer due to high levels of bacteria.

While it is obvious there is something very serious going on in Cohasset waters, there has never been a committee solely dedicated to investigating the causes. This July, the board of selectmen appointed eight residents to serve on the harbor health committee in the hopes it would be able to identify possible sources of pollution and/or other negative influences contributing to the apparent decline of the harbor environment.

The committee studied the water in the main harbor and outer channel, Bailey's Creek, the Parker Avenue cut, the mouth of the Gulf River, the Inner Cove, and Jacob's Meadow. Chairman Karen Quigley presented a preliminary report of its findings to the board of selectmen Jan. 31.

Quigley said in its research, no possible source of pollution was excluded without first having a thorough investigation. "I think we stepped on everyone's toes

Harbor concerns

- bacterial pollution: coliform (shellfish)/enterococci (swimming).
- nutrient loading from storm water drains and the Waste Water Treatment Plant.
- runoff from lawn chemicals and products.
- an increase in fresh water flow into the harbor.
- degradation of salt water marshes — Parker Avenue Cut and Jacob's Meadow.
- loss of marine life — plant and animal.
- lobster mortality when stored in the "cars."
- rapid corrosion and disintegration of mooring chains and boat zincs.

Weathervane reflects fishing heritage

'Pinky' to go atop the Pratt building

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

This spring the Cohasset Historical Society will have a brand new weathervane blowing in the breeze, thanks to Jerusalem Road resident and historical society member, Steve Bobo.

Steve Bobo's pinky weathervane is intended to depict three pinkys built in Cohasset around 1817 called "Lady Washington," "Fawn," and "Lizard."

At a special historical society event Sunday at the Pratt Building, Steve Bobo stands by the copper weathervane, which he crafted.

Made out of copper, the vane Bobo has fashioned depicts an early mackerel schooner, also known as a "pinky." Pinkys are an ancient design of ship, brought to the colonies by British shipwrights in roughly 1634. The New England pinky was derived from the Chebacco boat, its early predecessor, but the pinky was larger and found to be much handier.

By 1817 pinkys were being built about 50 feet long on deck and about 40 tons displacement. Bobo's pinky weathervane is intended to depict three pinkys built in Cohasset around 1817 called "Lady Washington," "Fawn," and "Lizard."

Cohasset is a town with a strong fishing heritage, and for roughly 150 years, mackerel fishing was essentially responsible for the town's wealth, prominence, and growth, as an abundance of maritime trades led to a booming economy. Bobo said at one time, Cohasset was the fourth most successful fishing port in Massachusetts, and in 1845, its fishing schooners landed 91,899 barrels of fish, mostly mackerel.

Therefore, Bobo thought a pinky weathervane adorning the cupola of the Cohasset Historical Society headquarters, located in the Pratt building on South Main Street, would be a fitting tribute to the town's past.

Bobo has made weathervanes before, although he jokes none thus far has been completely successful. "There are only three basic requirements for a weathervane: that it point in the direction

Boards hold fiscal powwow

Griffin presses for balanced budget

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"I suggest you inflict more pain on the public by showing this is what we're going to lose. The doors are going to open no matter what. Show us what we'll have."
— Tucker Glavin, advisory committee

The advisory committee, board of selectmen, and school committee are slated to have another round-table budget discussion Thursday, Feb. 16. While the first joint budget session, held Thursday, Feb. 2, was a good starting point, all three boards agreed there are many more issues to be vetted before the numbers are ready for Town Meeting.

This year, Cohasset is experiencing a new way of budgeting. Under the direction of Town Manager Bill Griffin, who is charged with presenting a balanced budget to Town Meeting under the town's Town Manager Act (voted at the 1997 annual Town Meeting and subsequently enacted by the state Legislature), departments have been asked to draft budgets that stay within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law that caps the amount a town can raise its tax levy from year to year. From those requests, Griffin drafted a balanced budget which takes the

Dept. of corrections

An article in last week's Mariner should have said Fire Chief Roger Lincoln is uncomfortable with four department members on each shift. Lincoln feels there should be more than four members on duty at all times. In addition, the fire department has been running its own ambulance service since 1977, but was receiving Advanced Life Support services from South Shore Hospital until 2003 when it took over that function. The Mariner regrets the error.

Wilson withdraws from school board race

Last day to pull papers Feb. 16

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The school committee race is back down to two — at least for the time being.

According to Town Clerk Marion Douglas, school committee incumbent Pam Wison has decided to withdraw her name from being a candidate for the school committee. Wilson could not be reached for comment by the time the Mariner went to press.

Without Wilson, and if no other candidates pull papers before the Feb. 16 deadline, school committee hopefuls Steven Fusco, 4 Surry Drive, and Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, are assured seats on the board, as there are currently two open three-year seats. However, if history is any indication, elections always tend to heat up at the last minute, and there is always the possibility one or more additional candidates could step forward.

The board of selectmen currently has two interested candidates in Roger Q. Hill of 19A Highland Avenue and Edwin G. "Ted" Carr of 88 S. Main St. The two are vying for selectman Michael Sullivan's seat. Sullivan is not seeking reelection.

The following incumbents have pulled nomination papers indicating their interest in seeking reelection: planning board member Peter Pratt; water commissioner John McNabb; sewer commissioner John Beck; Peggy Chapman of the board of health; Lisa LoJacono for recreation commission; and assessor Michael C. Patrolia.

There are three seats available on the Board of Library Trustees. Incumbents Patience Towle and Agnes McCann have pulled papers, as has Elizabeth Baker, who would be seeking her first term. Library trustee Carol Riley has indicated she will not seek another term.

There is one open five-year seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority and incumbent John Muncey will not seek reelection.

Nomination papers for the 2006 annual Town Election are available at the Town Clerk's Office at Town Hall. The last day to take out nomination papers will be Thursday, Feb. 16.

In order to hold an elected office, a potential candidate must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that a person is not running for office until he or she takes out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies the signatures collected on the nomination papers. Positions available for the 2006 town election include:

- Selectmen - One for three years
- School Committee - Two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - Three for three years
- Assessor - One for three years
- Board of Health - One for three years
- Cohasset Housing Authority - One for five years
- Planning Board - One for five years
- Recreation Commission - One for five years
- Sewer Commission - One for three years
- Water Commission - One for three years

Friday, March 10 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting to be held on Saturday, April 1, and for the Annual Town Election to be held on Saturday, April 8.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Board of selectmen changes meeting date

Next week's selectmen's meeting has changed dates for a third time. The board has moved its meeting back to Monday Feb. 13, but will meet at 6 p.m. to allow members to attend the violence prevention meeting being held at the schools with Dr. Robert Macy, which begins at 7 p.m. The board originally changed its meeting schedule in light of Valentine's Day on the 14th.

Meeting to be held on violence prevention

Dr. Robert Macy, director of community services for the trauma center in Boston, will be at the middle-high school Monday, Feb. 13 to share his tips for violence prevention with the community. Macy will discuss ways to identify behaviors which indicate a child may be heading in a violent direction, as well as the role of parents in saying no to inappropriate movies and video games, which can aid in violent behaviors.

Macy will meet with teachers, school staff members and members of the police department from 3 to 5 p.m., and with parents and interested community members from 7 to 9 p.m. Childcare will be provided to ensure parents are able to attend. For more information, please call the office of the superintendent at (781) 383-6111.

Cohasset women elected to Boys and Girls Club boards

At the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston's 111th annual meeting, held Nov. 30, Cohasset residents Emily Brown, Kristin Astley, Susan Carrabes, and Jane Roy were elected to various BGCB board positions. Brown has moved to the board of directors from the overseers, Astley, Carrabes, and Roy have joined the overseers.

The board of directors sets the policies and strategic direction of the agency, as well as approves plans and programs for the nearly 12,000 young people whom the BGCB serves in the five clubs in Charlestown, Chelsea, Dorchester, Roxbury, and South Boston, four community learning centers, and youth service providers network. The board of directors also adopts the annual budget for the organization in addition to raising and dispersing funds, and considers all actions on matters of general policy.

The board of overseers is charged with supporting BGCB's principal activities and policies, and acts as a liaison between the agency and the various communities it serves.

Committee dives into harbor health issues

pretty well," she quipped.

The report states that over a number of years, Cohasset Harbor has developed what appear to be a variety of indicators that the marine environment and the biodiversity of marine life have deteriorated. "Significant among these are the Harbor's inability to support marine life which had previously flourished, including but not limited to: rockweed, eelgrass, white clams, eels, smelt, flounder, perch, crabs, starfish, and sand dollars," it states.

The harbor also has very high levels of bacterial pollution (coliform/enterococci), especially during the summer. "It was worse last summer than prior summers," said Quigley, who added the majority of testing in the harbor is done during the summer months by students at the Center for Student Coastal Research. Their reports have been a very good resource for the committee, she said.

Possible contributors to the high levels include septic flowing into the harbor from Bailey's Creek and/or the Gulf River, from systems on Parker Avenue, from the Lightkeeper's House, and potentially the cottage on Bassing Beach. Potential culprits also include the illegal dumping of boat holds and stormwater drainage.

Quigley said more tests will need to be conducted and the sewer commission should verify Title 5 compliance for homes within the harbor area. In addition, she suggested a sub-committee be formed to take the lead in terms of stormwater management. She said either someone or a small team of people could meet with members of the Dept. of Public Works to manage and oversee stormwater drain management, to ensure the town is in compliance with state requirements.

Another problem in the harbor is the increase in algal blooms, nutrient loading, and levels of nitrates. Algal blooms can adversely affect water quality and are stimulated by the input of nutrients, such as phosphates. Nutrient loading can be the result of sewage or fertilizer runoff into a body of water. The primary source of nitrates are human waste and manure.

There is more water runoff flowing into the harbor due to development and more impervious surfaces, but there is also approximately 230,000 gallons of treated wastewater discharged daily into the Inner Cove by the wastewater treatment plant.

Quigley said the committee recommends investigating the best techniques to lessen the amount of nitrogen discharged into the harbor in the treated water from the wastewater treatment plant. She said the town should also try to restore the clam beds as shellfish help lower bacterial counts and control the algal blooms.

In addition, Quigley said the town should campaign for homes to use organic methods of lawn care to lessen the amount of chemicals flowing into stormwater drains, and in turn, into the waters of the harbor. She said some lawn treatments are intended to kill bugs, and it is important to remember, lobsters are in essence, large bugs that live in the sea. She said the committee has been working with a member of the Maine Lobster Institute and has sent one of Cohasset's lobsters up for an autopsy.

Lobsters are also being affected by the amount of fresh water flowing into the harbor. There is more water runoff flowing into the harbor due to development and more impervious surfaces, but there is also approximately 230,000 gallons of treated wastewater discharged daily into the Inner Cove by the wastewater treatment plant. Couple that with rain, and the salt levels in the harbor quickly decline.

"The lack of seaweed growth and many marine life forms that had previously flourished in the Harbor may be attributed to the decrease in salinity. Additionally, the lobstermen report deaths in lobsters stored in the cars after rain events (lobster deaths caused by fresh water are easily identifiable) that results in limited use of the cars," the report states.

The committee also found the harbor's salt marshes are being continually degraded. Quigley said marshes help filter pollutants, and it is vital their health be restored. Currently, phragmites, a plant that tends to invade and take over salt marshes when there is too much fresh water present, are taking over in Jacob's Meadow. Phragmites can be a fire hazard, and therefore the committee wants to look into periodic salt water flooding of the marsh to help control the plants. The committee would like to see the culverts repaired or replaced to ensure water is flowing properly.

The rapid rate of corrosion and disintegration of mooring chains and boat zincs are also causing some concern. Quigley said boat owners have reported quick deterioration of their mooring chains at the yacht club and the lobstermen have reported the same thing. What is weird about the disintegration is that the mooring chains are corroding from the bottom up, when they normally corrode at the top first.

Selectman Chairman Fred Koed said he has heard the galvanized chains being used by the lobstermen are the same kind of chain the Coast Guard uses, and they are deteriorating in Cohasset waters, although they are of the finest quality.

Quigley said testing needs to be done regarding water chemistry, temperature, and dissolved oxygen. If the water is lacking dissolved oxygen, the lack of oxygen could produce electrolysis (chemical changes caused by the passage of current through an electrolyte) and rapid disintegration.

The committee said it would like to look at any possible stray current running from electric lines on any docks by the water. It will also contact other harbors to compare similar incidents, and continue testing in Cohasset.

Quigley said there are many grants the town can look into for furthering the work of the committee. "We may not be at the stage yet where we can apply for them," she said, but if their progress continues as it has been, the town soon may be at a point where it does have the kind of concrete information necessary to apply for funding. The harbor health committee will be included on an upcoming board of selectmen's meeting agenda to further discuss the harbor's issues.

Aquarion water rate reduction approved

Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts has announced that the Massachusetts Department of Telecommunications and Energy has approved, effective January 1, 2006, a decrease in the annual water treatment facility surcharge rate for customers in Hingham, Hull and portions of Cohasset and Norwell.

"At a time when many utilities are increasing their rates, Aquarion is pleased to implement a reduction in the annual surcharge for the Hingham water treatment facility," said senior vice president Larry Bingaman. "Last year, our average residential customer used about 70,900 gallons and paid an annual water bill of $572. With the reduction in the water treatment facility surcharge, that same customer will now pay $549, a decrease of some $23, or 4.1 percent."

On Dec. 22, 2005 Aquarion filed an application with the Massachusetts DTE to reduce the water treatment facility surcharge billed to customers in Hingham, Hull, No. Cohasset and a portion of Norwell to cover the investment in the Hingham Water Treatment Facility. The original surcharge had been approved by the DTE in May 1996 after the treatment facility was placed in service. The surcharge reduction is a result of the redemption in 2005 of $2,565,000 in tax-exempt bonds originally issued by Aquarion's predecessor company in 1995 to finance a portion of the water treatment facility construction in Hingham.

"At a time when many utilities are increasing their rates, Aquarion is pleased to implement a reduction in the annual surcharge for the Hingham water treatment facility."

— senior vice president Larry Bingaman

Although the DTE approved a reduction in the surcharge, it noted that further investigation is necessary to review the application including the amount redeemed and the financial modeling. However, the Department agreed the reduced surcharge should be allowed so customers receive the benefit of an immediate reduction in the surcharge effective Jan. 1, 2006. The DTE is expected to begin its review later in the month, at the conclusion of which Aquarion will implement any additional findings.

Aquarion provides water to approximately 12,000 customers, or more than 30,000 people in Hingham, Hull, and portions of Cohasset and Norwell.

Prop. 2-1/2 taxpayer law turns 25

Requires ballot vote to raise levy

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Proposition 2-1/2 is one of the laws municipalities deal with every year. While residents often hear about it, many may not know exactly what it entails or why it exists.

Prop. 2-1/2 is a state law passed by Massachusetts voters in 1980 which limits the amount a town can raise its property taxes each year to 2-1/2 percent more than was raised the year before, plus taxes that will be paid from new construction and substantial renovations to property. It also provides a mechanism for a city or town, with approval from its voters, to override the tax cap and increase property taxes above the 2-1/2 percent to generate more revenue.

Angry Massachusetts taxpayers, who were fed up with continual tax hikes, were the driving force behind enacting Prop. 2-1/2. They collected thousands of signatures and were able to place a question on the November 1980 statewide ballot, asking voters if they wanted to take control of their soaring property taxes. By a margin of 59 to 41 percent, residents across the state voted "yes" to capping their property taxes and profoundly changed the way the state's hundreds of municipalities would conduct their finances going forward. Prop. 2-1/2 became law and took effect on July 1, 1981.

Property taxes are not the only means of revenue for a town, but they are the funds Cohasset relies most heavily on. Funds from new construction, motor vehicle excise taxes, parking tickets, building permits, state aid, etc., all help boost a town's bottom line.

Building a town budget that stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 does not mean the operating budget or each departmental budget is limited to receiving only 2-1/2 percent more than it did the year before. Prop. 2-1/2 only limits property taxes, which means the total operating budget can increase beyond that 2-1/2 percent when fees collected from areas such as excise taxes and building permits as well as funding from the state are factored in.

When the funding coming in is not enough to cover the expenses in a town, a community may decide to override the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 through either a debt exclusion or override vote. Debt exclusions are passed by a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting and a majority vote at the ballot box. Debt exclusions are used solely to cover special projects, such as sewer construction and school renovations, and their taxes go away when the debt is paid off. Operating budget overrides require a majority vote both at Town Meeting and the ballot box, and they permanently increase taxes.

An override or debt exclusion question can only be placed on an election ballot by the board of selectmen. Overrides require a majority vote of the entire board of selectmen, while debt exclusions require a 2/3 vote of the board. There are requirements set by the state which regulate the phrasing of override questions.

Traditionally in Cohasset on override years, a budget that is "out of balance" has been approved by a majority vote at Town Meeting contingent on a favorable ballot vote at the polls.

This year, Town Manager Bill Griffin wants Town Meeting to first vote on a balanced budget, followed by a supplemental budget contingent on an override. In other words, the town will pass a budget which stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, and a second budget will then be presented which requires using more funds than are available.

Interestingly, towns are also permitted to have an election first to see if the town would approve a budget with an override, then go to Town Meeting to pass the appropriation.

The state regulates the wording of override questions that are put on a ballot, but there are many formats for questions which are acceptable. A town may decide to pose a single question to voters, or multiple questions. Single questions would include wording such as, "for the purposes of funding operating budgets of the town and schools." They can be as general as the aforementioned question, or as specific as asking, "for the purposes of funding for two full time custodians for the school department."

Multiple questions can be presented in a menu format where funding would specifically be allocated for different services or programs. Each question either passes or fails on its own, separate from all other override questions.

A pyramid question is another option where voters are given a choice of two or more funding levels for either general or specific funding purposes. The funding levels are presented as alternatives, not individual proposals. If voters approve more than one funding level, the highest level of funding prevails, with the understanding that funds allocated include all lower funding levels.

Information for this article was provided by Town Manager Bill Griffin, Director of Finance Michael Buckley, and the Department of Revenue.

What Prop. 2-1/2 does	What Prop. 2 1/2 does not do
• Limits the amount the tax levy may increase from one year to the next. • Limits the maximum the tax levy can ever be. • Establishes mechanisms to allow the voters to exceed the usual limits on increases to the levy.	• Does not limit how much the entire operating budget can increase from one year to the next. • Does not limit how much any individual town budget can increase in a year. • Does not limit how much any individual taxpayer's property tax bill will increase one year to the next.

Happy birthday, Wayne Robbins Jr.!

AROUND TOWN

THINK SNOW

Is it ever going to snow? I am so discouraged with our winter as in my eyes, we need a ton of snow with temperatures in the mid to upper 20s or, just skip all the in between stuff and go right to the 60s and warmer. I guess that is wishful thinking but it is there nonetheless. Happy Valentine's Day next Tuesday to all.

PASSION PLUNGE

Hey Cohasset, this Saturday, Feb.11, three members from the Sida family — Graham, Nicholas (18) and Charlotte (17) — together with Jeff and Jay Nothnagle, Jessie MacDonald and Laurel Hickey, a wonderful lady who worked in the Cohasset schools for many years and now works as a full-time employee with the South Shore ARC program will all be plunging into the freezing cold Atlantic at Nantasket Beach as part of the eighth annual Passion Plunge, to benefit Massachusetts Special Olympics. It's a wonderful event — last year more than 600 people participated, raising over $250,000 for a fabulous cause..... and this amazing group will all be there again!

Donations can be made to Mass Special Olympics, 450 Maple Street, Building 1, Danvers, MA 01923; checks for MSO can be sent to the Sidas' home address (51 Deep Run) or you can donate via a web site www.passionplunge.org. Information surrounding the event is available on the web site too. The crazies are due to begin plunging at 1 p.m.! Come out to see the fun and the silly costumes, support your neighbors and be part of something truly worthwhile.....but pray the snow holds off!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Well, we have a birthday boy(OK, a man) in town. Wayne Robbins Jr. is celebrating his birthday and his wife Pam and daughter Nicole wanted to wish him a very special and happy birthday. Enjoy!

Wayne Robbins Jr

VACATION FUN

Looking for something to do over February Vacation? The Cohasset Recreation Department is holding Sports with Mr. Dykas Day at the Deer Hill School on Tuesday, Feb 21 with ages 4-6 from 8:30-9:30 a.m., grades K-2 from 9:30 a.m.-noon and grades 2 and up from 12:30-3 p.m. Also, on Wednesday, Feb 22, Big Ryan the storyteller be telling his tales at 10 a.m. for children ages 3 and older and "BugWorks" will be holding fun and interactive workshops in the afternoon for ages 3-5 and 6 and up. For more information, call 781-383-4109.

YOUTH LEADERSHIP

Congratulations to Tim Toomey for participating in the National Youth Leadership Forum on Defense, Intelligence and Diplomacy in Washington, D.C. last week. Tim, a Junior at CHS, was invited to join other students from across the country in an intense six-day seminar concerning national security, government and international relations. Great job, Tim!

SWEETHEART DANCE

This past Friday night the Girl Scouts held their annual Father/Daughter Sweetheart Dance. Dads and daughters enjoyed a wonderful evening of dancing! Red Hot Entertainment provided the music and pictures and a craft rounded out the event. A special thank you goes out to Megan and Elizabeth Leong along with the night custodian Bob for all of their help. A special thanks goes to the committee which as usual poured their hearts and souls into the event which includes: Leesa Bleicken, Leslie Bryan, Lori McCabe, Kristin Norton, Paula Pozniac, Trisha Czjack, and Michelle Cayer. Mary Jo Blackington and Carole Myers did a great job volunteering as well and all the leaders who helped coordinate this fun event! With nearly 200 girl scouts in the town, this is no small feat!

If you're interested in having your daughter join the scouting program please contact Amy Brash, Registrar at 781-923-1099.

MISSING BIKE

If you are the one responsible for this, please do the right thing and make the phone call. Here is a sad story to read about an eight-year-old girl and her now missing bike. After spending some time at the library the little girl's dad picked her up at the library, and unfortunately, she forgot she rode her bike. When she remembered on Saturday, she and her dad went by the library. Her helmet was there, but no bike. They went to the police station to see if anyone had turned in a bike, and unfortunately, nobody has.

Obviously, this little girl knows she made a mistake, as she left the bike at the library, but It is sad that in such a special town as Cohasset, someone would steal a kid's bike. Heres hoping that whoever took the bike might read this and return the bike. The bike is a boy's styled bike, black, from Decathlon sports. If anyone finds the bike, please call 383-9125.

Steve Bobo poses with his two granddaughters, Melissa Specht, 10, of Fitchburg, and Samantha Bobo, 12, of Cohasset, during a reception at Cohasset Historical Society headquarters. During the reception, there was a special unveiling of a copper weathervane Bobo built with the help of both girls. The vane will be installed on the cupola of the Pratt Building, which serves as the historical society's headquarters, after the cupola's balustrade is repaired, which will likely be between April and June. Until then, the weathervane is being "weathered" atop Samantha's house.

Cohasset Historical Society First Vice President Tom Gruber unveils the hand-crafted weathervane built by historical society member Steve Bobo at a special reception held Sunday, Feb. 5. While there had been a mackerel weathervane atop the Pratt Building when it served as the town library, when the library took up residence in the renovated former Osgood School on the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street, the mackerel, having become the library's symbol, went with it. Bobo crafted the new weathervane to adorn the Pratt Building's cupola, and pay homage to the town's maritime heritage.

This weathervane, crafted by Jerusalem Road resident and historical society member Steve Bobo, was unveiled Sunday Feb. 5 during a reception at the Cohasset Historical Society, located in the Pratt Building on South Main Street. The vane is a copper replica of a Colonial Pinky, a boat used by mackerel fishermen in Cohasset in the 1800s, and will be installed on the cupola of the Pratt Building to serve as a reminder of the town's maritime past.

of the wind, that it be relatively theft proof, and that is last as long as the building on which it's perched, because it's no picnic getting it up there. All of mine have failed at least one of the above requirements," he quipped.

Bobo said one of his earliest attempts was in the 1970s, when he built a vane to replicate a Baltimore Clipper schooner for the Yacht Club. However, he recalled the vane was never balanced quite right and tended to move up and down like a sailboat on the water. One day, Cliff Dickson climbed up with a hacksaw and cut off the jib, "and then it was fine," Bobo said.

Before beginning the pinky weathervane, Bobo carved a wooden replica of the ship to use as a model. Building models is nothing new for Bobo, who has also built full-size boats in his workshop. Bobo has built eight boats total, some as large as 32-feet long, and he has built a model boat for each. The model he used to build the pinky weathervane is now part of the Cohasset Maritime Museum's collection, located at 4 Elm St.

Once the model boat was complete, it was photographed and overlaid on a photo of the cupola of the historical society building at the appropriate scale. From there, Bobo began building the weathervane itself.

Currently, the weathervane is being "weathered" atop Bobo's son's house which has northeasterly and southwesterly exposure. "We've mounted it to see if it falls apart," Bobo joked. He said the Historical Society is in the process of having the cupola balustrade repaired, and once that is complete, sometime between April and June, the weathervane will be installed.

Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh reviews the school budget during a joint meeting with selectmen and the advisory committee last week in front of an audience of 40-50 people in the middle-high school library.

School budget is focus of town boards' powwow

requests into account, but would not require an override, or an increase in property taxes of more than 2-1/2 percent.

Presenting a balanced budget to Town Meeting does not mean the town cannot go for an override. Voters would first pass the balanced budget, then a subsequent budget with an override figure included. Should the override fail at the ballot box during the town election one week later, passing a balanced budget first would eliminate the need to balance it at the Town Meeting in the fall. "This is the most common way to do it in the state," said Griffin, adding if in the past overrides had always passed and the system always worked, he wouldn't be trying to change the process. "But the system didn't work," he said.

The advisory committee voted its unanimous support for Griffin's budget philosophy, and while the board of selectmen has not yet taken a vote, Griffin said he has spoken with its members and he believes a majority are in support. At the time the Mariner went to press, the school committee was scheduled to meet Thursday, Feb. 9 to further discuss its budget, and perhaps agree to present figures which coincide with Griffin's method. However, the draft budget presented at the joint meeting included an increase of 13.3 percent for the schools, which is not in balance with Griffin's budget.

Griffin's recommended budget would increase the school budget by $370,000, which is roughly a 3 percent increase over last year's allocation. Before the first joint meeting, the school committee had said it was virtually impossible to stay within the confines of a 3 percent increase, and would need at least a 5 percent increase, or roughly $617,219, just to open the doors.

"When we decided we'd go for 5 percent, we knew at least if that was the addition to our base budget, we could keep it (school program) floating if the override happened to fail," said school committee member Adrienne MacCarthy.

But the school committee did not present a budget with a 5 percent increase, it presented what Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh called a "needs based" budget, of $13,987,198 which would be a 13.3 percent increase. She said every year, to keep things moving ahead, the school department needs roughly 7 percent, and cuts in the past are continuing to have an effect on the school system today.

The13.3 percent increase includes 16 new positions as well as assumed budget offsets of $81,000 for the athletic department, $150,089 in circuit breaker special education reimbursement funds, and $86,980 from the METCO program. It also includes a placeholder cost of living increase for teachers of $238,655. The teachers' union has not settled a contract with the school department, which means that number is not yet finalized. Selectman Michael Sullivan said therefore, whatever budget the school committee decides on, the $238,655 number would be much larger than it is currently.

Advisory committee member Sam Wakeman said because the school committee was discussing both a budget with a 5 percent increase and a 13.3 percent increase, it was hard to understand what the base budget for the schools would be. A true figure could not be nailed down, but at best guess, the base was stated as $12,344,382 (fiscal 2006 budget) plus the 5 percent increase of $617,219 plus at least $238,655 for the increase in cost of living for teacher salaries, or $13,200,256. Taking into account the $370,000 allocated by Griffin, that would bring the gap down to roughly $486,000, but that number could increase depending on the outcome of contract negotiations.

Advisory committee member Tucker Glavin asked the school committee to look at the budget from strictly a fiscal standpoint. He said if it is not articulated as to what the schools will receive with the 3 percent increase which stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, it is difficult for the public to understand what is at stake if an override does not pass. "I suggest you inflict more pain on the public by showing this is what we're going to lose," he said. "The doors are going to open no matter what. Show us what we'll have."

Selectman Rob Spofford pointed out if the override fails, the school committee will have to go through the exercise of making cuts which stay within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 anyway.

School committee chairman Jamie Williams said there is projected to be an increase in state aid this year and she feels with that money, the gap could be smaller than anticipated. However, Griffin, who said he is getting used to being the "bearer of bad news," said while there is a projected increase of roughly $135,000, assessments for retired teachers are projected to increase by $214,000. While he too had been optimistic at first, "You need to look at both sides of the equation," he said.

Spofford asked Griffin what would happen if the school department does not agree to present a budget which comes in at the 3 percent increase Griffin has allocated. Griffin said if the school committee wants to certify a budget that is greater than his budget, "You have the right to do it. It's not strange, the police and DPW did, and I have an obligation to show Town Meeting what you really wanted," he said. However, Griffin's recommended budget will be presented first and will be the one printed on the Warrant.

Advisory committee chairman Donna McGee said alternately, if the school committee does not choose to join the other boards in sharing the philosophy of presenting a balanced budget to Town Meeting, "Where did you think that (extra) money was going to come from?"

Williams said the school committee had thought part would have come from state aid, until Griffin stated otherwise.

Big crowd

Between 40 and 50 interested residents attended the meeting and many spoke up, voicing opinions and asking questions. Some wondered why money could not be taken out of the police and fire department budgets to help the school department which they see is obviously in greater need of funding. Others asked how Griffin came up with the budget figures and whether they could be changed. Griffin explained his budgeting process and pointed out any resident can get up on the floor of Town Meeting and present a motion to amend the budget.

Others in the audience asked why every departmental budget had to be increased by 2-1/2 percent each year, and why couldn't some budgets be increased by more, such as 6 or 7 percent, while others which were not as in need of funding were increased by 1 percent. Under Prop. 2-1/2 property taxes are increased by 2-1/2 percent, but other means of revenue can increase the overall operating budget by a few more percentage points. The money raised by 2-1/2 becomes part of the overall budget which is divvied up among the various departments, which means some departments could receive more or less than 2-1/2 percent increases, based on needs. Many departmental budgets in Griffin's recommended budget include 3 percent increases.

At the end of the meeting, the three boards agreed to reconvene in two weeks, after the school committee has had a chance to regroup with its board members and come back with more budgeting options it feels comfortable with. Selectman Rob Spofford urged the board to come back with a number which stays within the balanced budget figure recommended by Griffin.

"I support the balanced budget approach," said Spofford, adding the numbers proposed by the school committee are not complete as it does not include raises for teachers. He reminded everyone the 16 new positions will also add more money to the town's budget which is not accounted for, as the town pays insurance costs for all town employees. He said if the town goes for an override, "perhaps personally, I'll vote for it," but added he has a role as a member of the board of selectmen, "to be a voice for that citizen who is getting priced out of here."

The school committee was scheduled to meet Thursday, Feb. 9 at 7 p.m. to discuss its budget. The next joint budget meeting of the advisory committee, board of selectmen, and school committee is slated for Thursday, Feb. 16.

OPINION

Tax law came from the people

It's hard to believe but an entire generation of Massachusetts residents have been born since Proposition 2-1/2 became law some 25 years ago.

Those future homeowners could take the property-tax cap legislation for granted because they won't have known life any differently.

So as Cohasset gears up for another override campaign, we think it's a good time to turn the clock back to the mid- to late-1970s, when Massachusetts was known as "Taxachusetts" and important industries and jobs were headed south to warmer climes and friendlier tax policy.

A taxpayer rebellion had been boiling just below the surface for some time when Citizens for Limited Taxation took the ball and ran with it. The grassroots group garnered enough signatures to get the tax-limitation question put on the November 1980 state ballot — on that same ballot Republicans Ronald Reagan and George Bush challenged President Jimmy Carter and Vice President Walter Mondale for the keys to the White House. Prop. 2-1/2 took effect on July 1, 1981.

Today, nearly 25 years later, taxes have still gone up but clearly not at the same soaring rate they would have without the law.

However, under 2-1/2, for taxes to increase beyond allowed limits — the people have to be asked permission. Voters must approve "overriding" the 2-1/2 tax cap at the polls. This can be a cumbersome task and oftentimes, the resulting debate pits interest groups such as parents of schoolchildren and senior citizens against one another. But nevertheless, we think Prop. 2-1/2 is a good thing because it makes government fiscally accountable.

We also think, as citizens and homeowners, it is crucial that we understand Prop. 2-1/2 is not an enemy to government but a control mechanism.

Barbara Anderson, executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, has said, "Before Prop. 2-1/2, government thought it was entitled to just take instead of ask."

For many of us, a large portion of our hard-earned dollars pay for the privilege of living in our town. So it's incumbent on us to understand the laws that govern our property taxes, so we can make a fair determination when an override is needed.

Teachers reject proposed contract

COMMENTARY

ED LEONARD AND ED LEARY

Last Thursday, the Cohasset Teachers Association rejected the School Committee's final contract proposal by a 72 - 3 margin. In spite of numerous concessions by the teachers, the contract put forth by the School Committee represented a significant step backward and a loss of benefits that teachers had worked long and hard in order to acquire. After a long and arduous negotiating process that has stretched out for over 437 days, the teachers received an offer that the membership found to be insulting in many ways.

These are strong words, and they might appear to be mere posturing until one looks at the reality of what the new contract entails.

In the first place, the School Committee has insisted upon totally restructuring the salary schedule for the staff. Teachers discovered that there are serious flaws in the package. The School Committee may boast that it has offered an average 2 percent salary increase to the staff and that some teachers will receive significant raises. In fact, careful analysis reveals that 44 percent of the professional staff would receive less than 2 percent as a raise for the current year. Even worse, numerous staff would receive a whopping $19 as a cost of living increase for this year! How could teachers support such blatant inequities in the proposal?

The School Committee will also say that there have been increases in the maximum salaries attainable at the top of the columns; what they won't say is that they have increased to 16 the number of years needed to reach the top. In Norwell and Hanover, teachers reach maximum in 11 years, in Hingham 12, and in Scituate 13.

Those teachers struggling in the middle of the columns suffer the greatest. Under the new proposal, a teacher with a Master's degree and six years of experience will earn $4,782 less than his/her peer in Norwell. Over his/her career, the cumulative impact of such inequity between towns might exceed $40,000 - $50,000! The School Committee also proposes an increase in the starting salary for new teachers at the bottom of the pay scale; for this, they should be lauded, but why do they assume that the rest of the staff should bear the burden of this increase? This year alone Hingham and Scituate teachers received a 4 percent cost of living increase. The School Committee has offered 3 percent next year.

The concerns are not only about money. At the beginning of negotiations, teachers in the elementary school asked to increase the amount of planning time available during the school day. To continue to provide high quality instruction for Cohasset students, teachers need more planning time. And for good reason.

Elementary education has changed over the past 20 years. In academically competitive school districts such as Cohasset, instruction has become more rigorous and much more highly individualized. In addition, with the introduction of new state and federal mandates such as No Child Left Behind and MCAS, teachers now have an ever-increasing burden of paperwork. These factors mean that responsible teachers in highly performing school districts must have more time to properly prepare their classes; thus the teachers asked to lengthen the school day to include additional planning time.

Unfortunately, the Cohasset School Committee is insisting that elementary teachers increase the amount of time, not in planning but in supervising students by up to 20 minutes a day. This would come to an additional 60 hours of work a year—without any additional compensation! They have said they must do this, not to increase the number

Signs of hearing loss should not be ignored

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

More than 30 million Americans are exposed to hazardous sound levels on a regular basis. Individuals of all ages, including children, adolescents, young adults, and older people, can develop hearing loss. Exposure occurs in the workplace, in recreational settings, and at home.

Noisy recreational activities include snowmobiling, riding go-carts, woodworking and other noisy hobbies, target shooting and hunting, playing iPods and other portable audio devices, power horns, cap guns, and model airplanes. Harmful noises at home include vacuum cleaners, garbage disposals, gas-powered lawn mowers, leaf blowers, and shop tools.

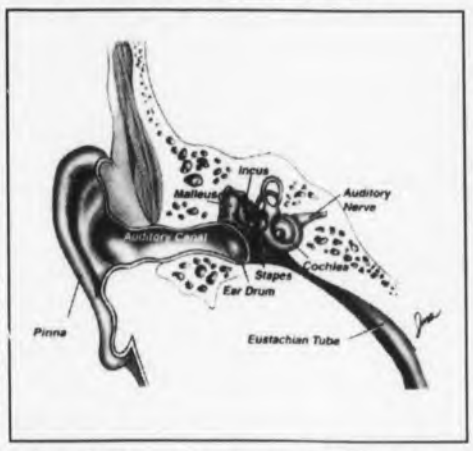
Of the 28 million Americans who have some degree of hearing loss, about one-third can attribute their hearing loss, at least in part, to loud noise.

We hear when the ear converts sound waves into electrical signals sent to the brain and interpreted as sound. The ear has three main parts: the outer, middle, and inner ear(see illustration). Sound waves enter through the outer ear and reach the middle ear where they cause the eardrum to vibrate. The vibrations are transmitted through three tiny bones known as the hammer, anvil, and stirrup. The eardrum and bones amplify the sonic vibrations and carry them to the inner ear. The stirrup transmits the amplified vibrations through the oval window and into the fluid that fills the inner ear. The vibrations move through fluid in the snail-shaped hearing part of the inner ear (cochlea) that contains the hair cells. The fluid in the cochlea moves the top portion of the hair cells, called the hair bundle, which initiates the changes that lead to the production of nerve impulses.

These nerve impulses are carried to the brain, where they are interpreted as sound. Sounds move the hair bundles in different ways allowing the brain to distinguish one sound from another, such as vowels from consonants.

Noise Induced Hearing loss (NIHL) can be caused by a one-time exposure to loud sound as well as by repeated exposure to sounds at various loudness levels over an extended period of time. Loudness is measured in units called decibels. Normal conversation is approximately 60 decibels, a refrigerator, 40 decibels, city traffic noise can be 80 decibels (Db). Loud noises that cause NIHL are motorcycles, firecrackers, and firearms, all emitting sounds from 120 to 140 Db. Sounds of less than 80Db, even after long exposure, are unlikely to cause hearing loss. Your iPod or other personal audio device set at 60 percent of its top value is about 80 Db.

Exposure to harmful sounds causes damage to the sensitive hair cells of the inner ear as well as the hearing nerve. These structures can be injured by two kinds of noise: loud impulse noise, such as an explosion, or loud continuous noise, such as that generated in a woodworking shop.



Symptoms — Symptoms of NIHL increase gradually over a period of continuous exposure. Sounds may become distorted or muffled, and it may be difficult for the person to understand speech. The individual may not be aware of the loss, but it can be detected with a hearing test.

NIHL is preventable — Know that noise above 90 decibels noises can cause damage. (about 7 out of a 10 on your iPod setting).

- Wear earplugs or other hearing protective devices when involved in a loud activity (special earplugs and earmuffs are available at hardware stores and sporting good stores).
- Be alert to hazardous noise in the environment.
- Protect children who are too young to protect themselves.
- Make family, friends, and colleagues aware of the hazards of noise.
- Have a medical examination by an otolaryngologist or physician who specializes in diseases of the ears, nose, throat, head, and neck, and a hearing test by an audiologist, a health professional trained to identify and measure hearing loss and to rehabilitate persons with hearing impairments.

Elder hearing loss is one of the most common conditions affecting older adults. One in three people older than 60 and half of those older than 85 have hearing loss. Hearing problems can make it hard to understand and follow a doctor's advice, to respond to warnings, and to hear doorbells and alarms. They can also make it hard to enjoy talking with friends and family. All of this can be frustrating, embarrassing, and even dangerous.

Elder hearing Loss

Some people lose their hearing slowly as they age, a condition known as presbycusis (prez-buh-KYOO-sis). Doctors do not know why it happens, but it seems to run in families. Sometimes loud noise can cause a ringing, hissing, or roaring sound in the ears, called tinnitus (tin-NY-tus).

Tinnitus is a symptom associated with many forms of hearing loss. It can also be a symptom of other health problems. According to estimates by the American Tinnitus Association, at least 12 million Americans have tinnitusand at least 1 million experience it so severely that it interferes with their daily activities. People with severe cases of tinnitus may find it difficult to hear, work, or even sleep.

Causes of Tinnitus — Doctors and scientists have discovered that people with different kinds of hearing loss also have tinnitus.

Too much exposure to loud noise can cause noise-induced hearing loss and tinnitus.

More than 200 medicines can cause tinnitus. If you have tinnitus and you take medicine, ask your doctor or pharmacist whether your medicine could be involved.

Allergies, tumors, and problems in the heart and blood vessels, jaws, and neck can cause tinnitus.

Remedy —See your doctor who can try to determine what is causing your tinnitus to see if it's related to blood pressure, kidney function, diet, or allergies or, perhaps any medicine you are taking. Although there is no cure for tinnitus, scientists and doctors have discovered several treatments that may give you some relief such as:

Try hearing aids, relaxing, or possibly maskers, which are small electronic devices that use white noise. They don't make tinnitus go away, but they make the ringing or roaring seem softer like listening to static at a low volume on the radio. Avoid anything that can make your tinnitus worse including smoking, alcohol, and loud noise. If you are regularly exposed to loud noise at home or at work, wear ear plugs or special earmuffs to protect your hearing and keep your tinnitus from getting worse.

Brits take on obesity

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, I guess it's all over for obesity.

Bonnie Prince Charlie, the deep thinker who is next in line for the British throne, has warned his subjects that they are in imminent danger of becoming lard asses like we folk in the colonies if they don't shape up.

"We are perhaps not very far behind our American cousins in the 'super sizing epidemic,'" was the way he put it in a lecture to the British Medical Association as quoted by the Times of London.

Charlie barely had time to recommend a routine of one meal of organic food a day, long walks on the Scottish moors and cycling for a half hour a day before he was picked up by his limousine and whisked away.

There is evidence that at least some in the UK are taking their Prince seriously. (Did someone say, "For a change?")

Authorities in Scotland have identified "haggis," their national dish, as a contributing factor in obesity among the bairns due to its high fat and salt content.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with haggis, it's the lining of a sheep's stomach filled with offal, oatmeal, onions and spices, which probably explains why there are no Scottish restaurants on the South Shore --- or any other shore, for that matter.

Haggis has such a hold on the Celtic psyche that they have an official "Scottish Haggis Master," a much-coveted title like Secretary of Defense, only in this case it's more like Secretary of Offense.

The current holder of the title, one Alan Pirie, defends his delicacy in an interview with Agence France Presse.

"It's made of all natural ingredients," he explained. "There's no rubbish in it at all. To compare it to processed meat like chicken nuggets and hot dogs is just ridiculous." I'll say.

But I digress . . .

Meanwhile, the war on obesity in the colonies goes on . . . and on . . . and on, winning some (like in the North Side Elementary School in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.) and losing some (like in Burger Kings everywhere).

It was the kids themselves who led the skirmish at North Side when they refused to sell chocolate bars and potato chips to finance their spring trip to Washington. Ten-year-old Daphne Auguste failed to see the logic in that kind of fund-raising.

"If they tell us to don't eat junk food and then after school we sell it, that disobeys what they said," she said.

At the same time, Burger King was promoting its new Triple Whopper, a virtual banquet between two buns, armed with 1,230 calories and 32 grams of saturated fat, enough to last the average American (if there is one) for two days.

And the research firm of Thomson Medstat of Ann Arbor, Mich., studied trends in health insurance for children and came up with the statistic that kids covered by Medicaid were more likely to suffer from obesity.

Thomson doesn't say why but I'm willing to bet it was more likely the Triple Whopper than haggis.

Convenience and demand drive bottom line

JEFF CUTLER

On consecutive days in downtown Hingham, I purchased the same food — two eggs, toast, coffee and sausages — but paid two vastly different prices. Granted, I enjoyed these meals at different establishments, but the food and the service were essentially the same.

At one restaurant, I paid less than $4 and even got a small glass of juice with my breakfast. The other charged me nearly $7 for the identical dining experience.

Was it the ambiance, the wait staff, the reputation or the abundant parking that justified the higher price?

I say, "Not at all."

The less expensive venue has more parking, better views and a larger seating area.

I don't think it is reputation either. Without naming names, both places are long-time Hingham eateries that are within walking distance of the tunnel construction and they each had different names before their current owners purchased them.

Not to dwell on breakfast, but had I prepared the meal at home the entire course would have probably cost me $2 in food, time, fuel and other incidentals combined. It's odd to think that the same consumer items can hit your wallet differently solely based on their delivery venue. Perhaps it's not venue at all, but simply supply and demand.

The traditional economic theory applies to most consumer activity and if something has a higher value to a buyer, most good sellers will pick up on that and price their item(s) accordingly.

But what of the places that price their goods just because of perceived value? Are items more costly because they're more valuable; or are they more valuable because they're more costly?

Tiger Woods is now using a new Nike putter that retails for around $300 and stores can't keep it in stock. The design is similar to a Ping putter that costs $100 and an Odyssey putter that sells for $120. What makes it different? The demand.

Golfers have seen Tiger win a few early-season tournaments. They watch the equipment he uses and they want to be like him. It seems there are enough people who believe this to keep the price up in the stratosphere for a metal rod used to tap golf balls.

Conversely, look at how quickly Johnny Damon Red Sox shirts became a surplus item. He's the same outfielder but the demand dropped off faster than his flowing locks of hair.

Or take a look at Beanie Babies. You can still buy them for $3 or $4 a pop I think, but what ever happened to the insane $100-200 price tag for the Princess Diana Beanie or any of the other 'limited' edition stuffed toys? Demand dropped and so did the price.

When it comes to necessities like fuel or groceries, the sheer number of suppliers who can deliver these products manages the market. Unless they've created a monopoly by being the only game in town, they are compelled to remain competitive.

The downside of this equation is that some companies through their own success can cripple competition and then morph into a monopoly. Witness Lowe's and Home Depot knocking Walsh & Packard out of business. On the upside of this for consumers is that Lowe's and Home Depot are in fierce battle for your dollars so prices should remain mostly in check.

It's a different case with Stop & Shop. Their aisles are now cluttered with an almost equal number of brand-name products and Stop & Shop brand packages. Because we only have one large supermarket at either end of town, and S&S has a store right over the line in Cohasset, the store is able to eliminate certain products that might not sell well. Then they dedicate the shelves to their own brands that they can sell at a higher margin.

A while back, my mother vowed to do the bulk of her shopping at the Fruit Center because the larger store was "out" of her favorite items on multiple occasions. She had spoken with a Stop & Shop manager twice asking that the store carry certain products, but those requests didn't garner any results.

The wildcard in product pricing is the convenience effect. When you're at the movies, your $4 drink would have cost only $1.29 outside the theater, but it was more convenient to buy it inside. The same holds true for snacks at the airport, postcards and batteries on any resort island, daily Internet access at any coffee shop or bookstore, or the delivery of food or items right to your door.

Essentially, it's pretty convenient not to have to shop for eggs, bread, sausages, coffee and juice. It's also convenient not to worry about setting the table, doing dishes or paying for parking.

I guess the price of my convenience is between $4 and $7.

Library trustees fight for more funding

But are in same boat as other depts.

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The new Paul Pratt Memorial Library opened for business from its new headquarters at the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street in March 2003. With a larger building and more patrons, those involved with the library say the fiscal 2007 recommended library budget is far from adequate.

"We need the resources to be able to deliver."
— Jackie Rafferty, library director

Library Director Jacqueline Rafferty, library trustees chair Sarah Pease, and trustees treasurer Patience Towle came before the board of selectmen Jan. 31 to discuss their thoughts on Town Manager Bill Griffin's proposed recommended budget. While the library had requested a total budget of $503,753, Griffin has recommended $460,430, in an effort to keep the fiscal 2007 budget within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2.

"We would like to see our budget fully funded," said Pease, adding the increase in the building's use, while exciting, requires more cleaning and repairs. Maintenance funds have not been properly allocated since it opened, and the building is slowly deteriorating, she said, adding, "We are suffering from our own success."

The increase in patrons has not only led to more wear and tear on the building, it has led to a need for more library staff. There are 10 library positions included in Griffin's fiscal 2007 recommended budget.

Towle said the library trustees and staff members feel as if their backs are up against a wall. "The library is poorly maintained, dirty and understaffed," she said, adding this year it is essential the library receive $41,000 for staffing; $17,000 in capital items for computer related items; and $16,000 must be added to the town's custodial budget line item and earmarked for the library. "It may seem small, but to us, it would mean the world," she said.

Rafferty pointed out the library is roughly 1.5 percent of the total town operating budget, "and we're busier than ever. We need the resources to be able to deliver," she said, adding she thinks the library does a very good job considering the resources it has to work with.

Rafferty said there has been a 42 percent increase in loan activity but staffing levels have stayed the same, which makes things very difficult. She said the library also has 42 computers it must maintain and the funding should be allocated in the town budget every year to allow the library to make the necessary updates and replacements on a regular rotation cycle. Adding $17,000 this year would start that cycle off, she said.

Towle added there are roughly 12,000 checkouts per year on the computers in the reference section of the library, which means they are being used very frequently. "We just added three more (computers) because of the demand," she said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said while it is sad to hear what is happening to the library, "every department says the same thing," in terms of needing more funding, which does not make for easy decisions.

Rafferty said to the library's credit, it tries to supplement its budget with grants whenever possible. "I am an avid grant writer, and in the last three years we have received two worth $17,000. I believe in going above and beyond municipal resources, but this is a very popular library in this town," she said, and currently, funding is not adequate.

While Towle said she understands the library is not alone in requesting more funding, and all requests will be taken into consideration before the board of selectmen votes to approve a final budget, she said it is her job and the job of library staff and trustees to advocate for the library and not look at the big picture. "It is our job to ask you to rob Peter to pay Paul Pratt," she said.

Library trustee Sheila Evans said when residents agreed to renovate the former Osgood School and turn it into a brand new town library, they trusted the building would be maintained. "We would have promised our souls that we would," she said, adding the funding to properly take care of the library should be included in the library's base budget.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said the reason the money is currently not available is because the town is limited by Prop. 2-1/2 — the state law this puts a cap on the amount a town can raise its tax levy from year to year. "We need an override," he said.

However, Selectman Rob Spofford said while an override might provide the funds necessary, there are residents who don't want to keep raising taxes. With Vanderweil's philosophy, "You'll drive everyone out of this town who isn't rich," Spofford said.

Facilities manager needs more maintenance money

Buildings are not that clean

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Facilities Manager Brian Adams has a stack of maintenance requests building up in his office, but he doesn't have the staff required to get the job done.

Adams is responsible for managing the maintenance for Town Hall, the library, the police and fire station, the department of public works building, the harbormaster's shack, and all three schools, but currently, he has only three employees working for him, including one foreman and two maintenance workers. The lack of employees has taken Adams out of his role as a manager, and has put him to work doing hands-on repairs.

"I'm way behind right now," said Adams, adding he currently has one employee serving as the custodian for the library, Town Hall, the police and fire department, and the DPW building.

Adams came before the board of selectmen Jan. 31 to explain how his budget is affecting operations. Adams requested $718,619 for fiscal 2007, but Town Manager Bill Griffin recommended $504,504. Griffin's recommended budget is a balanced budget which stays within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2.

Adams said ideally, he would like to have 12 or 13 employees to cover the buildings in Cohasset. Griffin said his budget would add two maintenance workers, salaried at roughly $40,000 per year, and one half-time custodian, salaried at roughly $14,000 per year, which will help complete the tasks currently on hold, and will also free up Adams to take on the managerial role he was hired to have. Griffin has also allocated money in the service budget for maintenance.

"The facilities are in need of attention," said Adams, adding if the town neglects them, the problem is only going to get worse. He said there are regular maintenance items that should be completed on an ongoing basis, such as changing of filters and other similar items, "and we're not doing them," he said. Adams added on a scale of one to 10 in terms of cleanliness, the town's buildings are at roughly a three or four.

This October, Adams came before the school committee to provide an update on where the schools stand from a cleaning and custodial standpoint, and he was very dismayed to report his findings. Schools are ranked on a scale of one through five with level one as "hospital standard" clean, and Cohasset's schools were a four. At that time, he said level four is typically not acceptable for schools.

The schools have four custodians (included in the school budget) and it also uses the One Source cleaning company, which works in the buildings at night. One Source provides 6-1/2 employees for each shift. "We're not given enough money for the One Source people to do their job adequately," said Adams, as the contract the school has with the company directs the company to perform certain tasks, based on what it can afford to spend. Adams added he would guess some of the problems the school department has had with vandalism at the school could be due to the level of cleanliness at the schools. He said if the buildings are not kept clean, students are less likely to have respect for them.

Facilities manager Brian Adams said on a scale of one to 10 in terms of cleanliness, the town's buildings are at roughly a three or four.

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked Adams what it would take to bring the town's buildings up to the point where they are at a nine or 10 in terms of cleanliness. Adams said he wouldn't even venture to take a guess, as it would first require hiring more personnel to get the work done, followed by the necessary materials and equipment.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said at night, he often drives by the schools and sees many lights on. "How come we can't get those turned off," and save some money, he asked. Adams said because the cleaning service works at night, the lights need to be on during after-school hours, but they are supposed to be off by 11 p.m.

Dormitzer also asked why the heat in the town's buildings cannot be better controlled. "How about this room at 80 degrees?" he said of the selectmen's meeting room at Town Hall.

Adams replied when the town's newest buildings were redone, very efficient equipment was installed, "You just have to shut them off," he said. Many of the buildings have computers which can be programmed to do that automatically. However, until there is more staff to help him out, Adams will continue working on the hands on tasks, which take him away from those kinds of managerial responsibilities.

Commane is named water superintendent

Glenn Pratt, chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission recently announced the appointment of Eileen Commane as water superintendent. A resident of Norwell, Commane was water facilities manager for the Town of Weymouth. Prior to her work in Weymouth she spent 14 years as water utility manager for American Water Company's Massachusetts subsidiaries.

"Throughout her 23 year career in the waterworks field, Eileen has established herself as a dedicated, highly capable individual who has been recognized by the water supply community for her contributions to the industry," commented Pratt. She has been particularly active with the education committee of the New England Water Works Association, a trade group dedicated to safe drinking water through education and public outreach," Pratt noted.

"We endorse this appointment wholeheartedly and encourage customers with water quality questions or concerns to contact her."
— Glenn Pratt, water commission

Commane is involved in the Rotary Club of Hingham and Hull, and will serve as president-elect of the club next year. Following Hurricane Mitch in Honduras several years ago, Commane traveled with fellow Rotarians to see first hand what was needed. Subsequently the Hingham and Hull Club contributed funding for several modest block homes for desperately needy Honduran families. The Rotary Club presented Commane with the Paul Harris Fellow Award last year for her contribution to the organization.

Eileen Commane is the new Cohasset water superintendent.

"The focus of Rotary International this year," Commane said, "is to provide safe drinking water to the one billion people in the world without access to it."

Commane received a bachelor's degree in chemistry from Holy Cross College in Worcester and is presently pursuing a master's degree at Boston College in Chestnut Hill.

"We endorse this appointment wholeheartedly and encourage customers with water quality questions or concerns to contact her," Pratt said.

"I am looking forward to working in the Cohasset Community. I want residents to contact me if they have any questions or concerns regarding the drinking water," said Commane. To reach Eileen Commane call 781-383-0057 or email ecommane@amwater.com.

Town Census for 2006

The Town Census for 2006 has been mailed to each household. Information obtained from the census is ultimately used to prepare the street list, annual registry of voters, school list, dog owner list, and jury list. It also establishes eligibility for resident's tuition at state colleges, for veteran reimbursement, for senior citizen programs and other benefits. The census provides valuable information to various departments throughout the town.

Dog forms are on a tear off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2006. Dog forms need to be returned as soon as possible although you may have recently renewed your 2005 license. If you did not receive your census, call the Town Clerk's office at 781-383-4100.

School budget more than a slice of the town's budget pie

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At face value, it would appear the school department budget makes up roughly 38 percent of the fiscal 2007 budget recommended by Town Manager Bill Griffin. However, there are many costs which are picked up on the town's side which directly impact the schools, which in reality increases the school department's budget allocation by millions of dollars.

The fiscal 2007 budget is not yet finalized, but taking a look at fiscal 2006, the school department's allocation was $12,344,382. Against the town's total fiscal 2006 operating budget figure of $31,724,743, it would be easy to assume the schools received 38.9 percent. However, when the costs associated with school employees' health insurance, life insurance, Medicare, pensions, etc., are factored in, in reality, 60.69 percent of the fiscal 2006 total operating budget was spent on school-related items.

Griffin said last year, the town paid $446,056 for building maintenance, which includes the costs associated with the school buildings.

According to Town Manager Bill Griffin, in fiscal 2006 the school department was allocated $12,344,382. On top of that, the town paid $5,201,074 in costs related to the schools, which means the amount of money which was spent on the schools was actually $17,545,456.

Griffin said last year, the town paid $446,056 for building maintenance, which includes the costs associated with the school buildings. In fact, the schools make up roughly 75 percent of the cost, or $334,542. Another $100,000 was spent on field maintenance directly related to the schools.

Throughout the year, the town pays roughly $1,966,000 in health insurance for all town employees, including those that work for the schools. In fiscal 2006, the school's share of health insurance was roughly $1,107,448. Also included were $4,947 in life insurance costs (out of a town-wide total of roughly $8,000), another $117,496 in Medicare taxes ($190,000 total), and $544,229 in retired teachers' health insurance.

The school department has presented a fiscal 2007 budget which includes a 13.3 percent increase over fiscal 2006, including anticipated offsets. Within that increase, there are 16 new positions, which would cost the school department $581,759. On the town side, insurance costs for those new positions alone would be $181,104.

The state Department of Education takes into account money spent on the schools from both the school and town budgets. The DOE determines a foundation budget each year which reflects the state's estimate of the minimum amount needed in each district to provide an adequate educational program. There is also a figure set for required net school spending, which is the annual minimum that must be spent on schools, including carryovers from prior years. Net school spending includes municipal indirect spending for schools, but excludes capital expenditures and transportation costs.

According to the DOE, the net school spending required in fiscal 2006 for Cohasset was $10,573,518, which includes the required local contribution and chapter 70 state aid funds. The actual amount spent by the town was $13,956,500, which is 32 percent, or $3,382,982, more than required.

Budget breakdown

Department	Request	Recommended	Difference	% of total budget
School	$13,791,366	$12,714,714	$1,076,652	38.7
Fire	$2,014,597	$1,842,864	$171,733	5.6

Library	$503,753	$460,430	$43,323	1.4
Elder affairs	$209,954	$179,024	$30,930	.54
Grand total	$34,824,327	$32,867,188	$1,957,139

School department figures do not include the amounts paid by the town for school building and field maintenance, health insurance, life insurance, property insurance, workers comp., Medicare taxes, unemployment, pensions, debt service or retired teachers health insurance, which totals roughly $5 million.

Preventative screenings at St. Anthony's, Feb. 23

Residents living in and around Cohasset can be screened to reduce their risk of having a stroke. Life Line Screening will be at St. Anthony Catholic Church, 129 South Main St., Feb. 23. Appointments will begin at 9 a.m.

A stroke, also known as a "brain attack," is ranked as the third leading killer in the world, and the second among women. Through preventive screenings, the risk of having a stroke can be greatly reduced.

Screenings are fast, painless and low cost. They involve the use of ultrasound technology, and scan for potential health problems related to blocked arteries which can lead to a stroke, aortic aneurysms which can lead to a ruptured aorta, and hardening of the arteries in the legs, which are a strong predictor of heart disease. Also offered for men and women, is a bone density screening to assess their risk for osteoporosis.

Each screening requires 10 minutes or less to complete. A complete vascular screening package, including the Stroke/Carotid Artery, Abdominal Aortic Aneurysm and Ankle Brachial Index (hardening of the arteries) screenings is $109. Sign-up for a complete vascular package; include the osteoporosis screening and pay only $129.

For more information regarding the screenings or to schedule an appointment, call 800-697-9721. Pre-registration is required.

FEBRUARY IS HERE!
ENROLL NOW, BEFORE CAMPS ARE FULL!
CAMP FAIRS CAN HELP YOU DECIDE

By Bette Bussel, Executive Director, American Camp Association, New England

With kids back in school and winter weather looming over much of New England, summer seems a world away. It's not too soon, however, for parents to start thinking about ways to create a safe and enriching summer for their children. And the sooner the better! Camps can fill up early and many are full by late February. It may seem early, but honestly...it isn't!

Nationwide, more than 11 million children attend camp each summer. Finding and securing the perfect camp experience for each child can be tricky. If you have not begun your camp search, now is the time!

Camp Fairs can really help! At camp fairs, some families will begin to explore their options while others will finalize their decision and reserve space at the camp of their choice. Wherever you are in the camp search process, attending a camp fair can assist in important ways: Talking with a camp director or representative at a camp fair often helps with making the final decision. And for folks just beginning to look into camp options, stopping by the camps' displays and gathering their materials can provide a sense of what's out there—no better way to jump start the camp search process.

of hours of instruction but to meet the needs of a new bus schedule. A member of the committee has specifically stated that the necessity for this increased supervision is a direct result of the firing of instructional aides last year, aides who were never replaced.

Our teachers are willing to work the longer day that the School Committee is demanding — and work it without additional pay. But the additional time needs to be designated as planning time, devoted to accomplishing the educational tasks listed above.

There are more problems with the proposed package, more concessions and losses of present benefits, and these will be discussed at a later date.

So, what is the current state of affairs? In response to a request from the PSO, the teachers are modifying the current "work to rule" policy. Teachers will return to the previous practices in terms of meeting with parents and providing extra help to students before and after school. There will be no restrictions on writing recommendations for colleges, private schools, internships, scholarships, or employment.

In the near future we will be reaching out to the parents to support us in our efforts to obtain a fair and reasonable contract. We are asking parents to become more involved in our struggle; please email pmcgrail@cohassetk12.org in order to find out how you may assist us.

In closing, the teachers of Cohasset provide a quality educational experience for the students. We deserve respect and a fair contract. In terms of attracting and retaining quality staff, we are competing with towns that value their teachers and treat them accordingly. Please contact the members of the School Committee, the Advisory Board, and the Selectmen to urge them to settle this contract.

Ed Leonard and Ed Leary are members the Cohasset Teachers Association.

Lady hoopsters going back to the tournament

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

They have crossed over the doorstep and have entered into the House of Hoops, the Division 4 state tournament for basketball. And what a journey it has been for the Lady Skippers. Fans have closed their eyes and thanked their lucky stars.

Who could have imagined in early January, when they were hitting the lower levels of the South Shore League standings, they would emerge into tournament status and claim a 10-6 record at this point. No, Cohasset did not rise to the top spot in its league. Carver holds that honor with an 11-1 record as of Feb. 1.

Nevertheless, the Lady Skippers can feel very proud of their progress. Monday marked the day the Lady Skippers qualified for their third tournament berth in a row. That puts head coach John Levangie to near Belichick status when it comes to coaching basketball.

So here's what happened. Holbrook came to town and Cohasset went to town. With a point (or many points) to prove, the Skippers put on a show. Passing, shooting, rebounding, defense. You name it. The Cohasset players showed how badly they wanted this win when they tightened the defensive leash on the Bulldogs.

At the end of the first half, a double take at the scoreboard would reveal a 20-0 Skipper lead.

Overall, Chelsea Grossman pumped in 16 points, Gabriella Flibotte 12, and Samantha Lehr eight. Things got a little scary when Holbrook's Jenna Mamme caught fire in the second half and tallied an amazing 27 points.

Yet, Cohasset proved it wouldn't take no for an answer, especially on its home court. The 46-33 final score gave the Skippers what they wanted: the tourney invite.

"It's just incredible how far the girls have come since day one," said Levangie. "Now they can really be rewarded for their hard work."

The victory over the Bulldogs came on the heels of another victory against the Pat Doonan (pictured above during the Skippers' first game against Abington-EB) scored what turned out to be the game-winning goal in Wednesday night's rematch. Cohasset is now 7-7-2, and can clinch a state tournament berth with a win tomorrow night against Norwell.

Tournament hopes on ice

Skippers can get in postseason with win over Norwell on Saturday

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset High hockey fans could not have asked for a more scintillating scenario.

For the second straight season, Norwell stands between the Skipper skaters and a berth in the Division 3 state tournament.

When Cohasset squares off against its rivals Saturday night (8 p.m. face-off) at Pilgrim, they will be playing for at least a share of second place in the South Shore League. Norwell (14-1-1 overall, 10-0 league) has already clinched the league title. Finishing second automatically qualifies a team for the postseason, regardless of whether it finishes .500.

Even with a loss to Norwell, Cohasset (7-7-2, 6-3-2) could still get in the postseason dance by winning two of its last three games against South Shore Voc. Tech, Pembroke and Westwood. That would give the Skippers the necessary .500 minimum record.

But Skippers head coach Ben Virga and his charges want it Saturday.

"I know I'm fired up for it," Virga said Thursday morning. "I know I'll be thinking about Cohasset High School hockey for the next 48 hours. I think the players will be ready to; they've been pumped up the last couple days."

Norwell has plenty of firepower up front, led by two of the league's leading scorers, sophomore centers Dan Dempsey and Cody Cavicchi. In the teams' first meeting Jan. 18, Cohasset outplayed and out-shot (33-18) Norwell, but the Clippers took home the 3-0 win, thanks in large part to the play of junior goalie John Collins.

The Cohasset players have expressed confidence in recent weeks that they can even the score in the rematch, a sentiment that Virga echoed on Thursday.

Cohasset vs. Norwell
Saturday, 8 p.m.
Pilgrim Ice Arena

"I think if we can chase rebounds, crash the net and play aggressive, we can do it," said the coach, who sounded like he was ready to lace up his skates himself. "I feel we can play with them. They have a couple kids who can really finish. If we take five minutes off, they'll probably score three goals. We need to play for 45 minutes."

Cohasset finds itself in a position to make the postseason by virtue of its current three-game winning streak, all against league teams. The most recent victory came Wednesday night.

Skippers 3, Abington-East Bridgewater 2

After a sluggish first period that saw the Skippers on the wrong end of a 1-0 score, Cohasset tri-captains Brandon Smith, Brian Straughn and Mark Bouchard talked to their teammates in the locker room about the importance of this game.

"They conveyed the message that, hey, the stars are aligning here for Saturday's game with Norwell to be for a spot in the tournament," Virga said. "They knocked us out of it last year [with a 3-2 win in the season finale], and the kids knew they wanted to avenge what happened last year."

Following those speeches, Cohasset came out and played what Virga called the best 15 minutes his team has played in his three years coaching the team.

Just 30 seconds in, junior defenseman Conor Holway took the puck from an AEB player on a fore-check and fired it toward the net. Junior Chris Davis was there to tip it in for his eighth goal in his last six games.

Shortly thereafter, the Smith brothers combined to give Cohasset the lead.

Andrew, a freshman, controlled the face-off back to Brandon, who unleashed a beautiful shot, top corner. With just 1:30 remaining in the second period, sophomore Pat Doonan scored a crucial insurance goal.

The Skippers committed a couple quick penalties to open the third period, and AEB scored on the 5-on-3 advantage to pull back within one. The game was played pretty evenly over the last 10 minutes. Brandon Smith and Bouchard both had great opportunities to score, and freshman goalie Jonny Wade had to make a couple good stops to keep the visitors from tying it up.

In the end, Cohasset came away with the huge win. Virga said the play of his team's veterans set the tone for everyone wearing a white sweater.

"Brandon Smith played his best game in the time I've had him," said the coach. "Brian Straughn played unbelievable. They are two seniors who desperately want to make the tournament in their last year."

Skippers 6, Hull 2

The Pirates held a 2-1 lead early in Saturday's contest. Knowing there was no way they could afford to lose this game, the Skippers stormed back over the last 35 minutes with five unanswered goals.

Lanzillotti led the attack with two scores, and Wade played another fine game in net for Cohasset.

Next up

After Saturday's showdown, Cohasset will play South Shore Voc. Tech on Wednesday, 7:40 p.m. at Pilgrim. Cohasset won the teams' first meeting on Dec. 17.

CHS boys hoops looking for wins

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys basketball team continues to go through its growing pains.

The Skippers have been more competitive of late, but have yet to figure out how to get over the hump. The team's most recent game was a 64-50 loss down the Cape to Harwich.

Sophomore guard Patrick McCarthy led the Skippers with a career-high 22 points. McCarthy played an all-around strong offensive game, hitting a couple threes against the Harwich zone and getting himself to the line with aggressive moves to the basket.

Senior Trevor Brady was Cohasset's other main scorer with 16. The Skippers hung tough with Harwich throughout most of the first half, but the Rough Riders built a double-digit lead in the last few minutes. In that run was a Ryan Soares three just before the buzzer that Cohasset head coach Dorian Bryant called "a killer" for his team.

Bryant said after the game he and his assistants will continue to preach the fundamentals that have proven to be a problem for Cohasset.

"We had some issues taking care of the ball tonight," Bryant

Swimmers rack up two more victories

By Caitlin Donovan
CORRESPONDENT

The Scituate-Cohasset swim team came out with two big wins last week against Oliver Ames and Hanover, bringing their record to 7-1.

The team has been working well together in practices and meets, and as a result, has had a winning season so far with only one loss to Duxbury. The Sci-Cohs have one last meet against Pembroke before the Championships.

So far this season the team has had numerous swimmers make sectionals as well as states. The team has really come together this season, not just in the pool but as a whole. The roster looks promising for next season.

Limited space left for spring lacrosse

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has completed its spring registration period, but a limited number of roster spaces remain available at some age levels.

"We've been lucky to come through our registration period with just about our preferred roster sizes at all levels," says Chuck Jaffe, director of the program, which will field 14 boys and girls teams in grades 3-8 this spring. "We have just a few open spaces, and we will give them out on a first-come, first-served basis."

Jaffe notes that the lacrosse organization starts practices in early March and, each year, winds up with a few children who only decide that they want to play after a friend tells them about the start of workouts. Typically, at that point, it is too late to add the additional kids at that time.

"This year, more than most, we may have some extra flexibility – particularly on the boys side of things," Jaffe says, "but ideally we will have everyone who wants to play signed up soon, before they wind up missing out."

Registration costs $150 for one player and $275 for two. Cohasset Youth Lacrosse begins practicing in March, completes its season in June and works throughout the spring to avoid scheduling conflicts with the other youth sports in town.

said. "We had too many turnovers, and we also got out-rebounded. Those two areas is where we lost the game."

The second-year coach remains optimistic that his team will begin to put it together offensively over its last four games.

"I think it's something we can fix, but it comes with effort," Bryant said. "In practice, we've been doing a lot of drills that emphasize making the right decision with the ball, especially in 2-on-1 and 3-on-2 situations.

"Once we get a little more mature, we will get better."

One thing that has encouraged Bryant this season is the development of freshman guard John Sturino. After playing the first half of the year with the JVs, Sturino was recently called up to varsity and started against Harwich.

"He played with a lot of energy and focus," Bryant said of Sturino. "He's a freshman and he will make his share of mistakes, but he will make some nice plays, too."

Cohasset took another tough loss on Saturday in Nantucket, 50-40. After playing the night before against Carver, the boys woke up for a 7 a.m. bus to take them to the ferry.

Despite that, the Skippers kept it close for most of the game. The Whalers pulled it out, however, when Jordan Ferriera (game-high 14 points) found holes in the Cohasset zone and hit a couple late threes in the corner to clinch it for the home team.

Junior forward Justin Alexander led the Skippers with 12 points, followed by 11 from McCarthy. Bryant said overall execution on offense was again his team's biggest drawback.

"We had our chances to win when [Nantucket] had some turnovers in our end," he said. "We just couldn't make the play to put us over."

After hosting league champion Hull tonight, Cohasset closes out its season with three games in four days next week: Monday at home against Avon, Tuesday at Norwell, and Thursday at home with Mashpee.

Lady hoopsters going back to the tournament

FROM HOOPSTERS, PAGE 19

Whalers in Nantucket the prior Saturday. As you may recall, the Whalers came to Cohasset earlier in the season and took advantage of the struggling Skippers by handing them a 13-point loss. This time the Lady Skippers "reversed the curse."

If any Cohasset Skipper felt seasick from the boat cruise to Nantucket it didn't show in their performance. Flibotte sparked another fire in the beginning, eventually totaling a career-high 32 points. Junior Lacey Richardson did her part with 12, closely followed by Lehr with eight.

Just in case the Whalers didn't have a hard enough time controlling the new and improved Skipper offense, Grossman and Lieb-Lappen led the way with the infamous Cohasset press. This deadly offense-defense combination gave the Skippers a well earned 59-48 victory.

The victory at Nantucket proved important for two reasons. First, the game gave the Lady Skippers significant momentum going into the all-important game against Holbrook. Second, it halted a potential slide in the standings due to two earlier losses in a row, against Abington and Carver.

Speaking of these losses, the Skippers fell to the Green Wave of Abington on the last day of January. For starters, Grossman could not play, leaving a big hole in the offense. At the beginning of the second half, Lehr and Flibotte fouled out.

Even worse for the Skippers, Abington senior captain Lauren Conway returned to the roster and drilled in 15 points to further disadvantage Cohasset. With the odds stacked up against them, the Skippers battled their way through the game. Despite the 47-43 Cohasset loss, some positive things happened for the Lady Skippers.

Flibotte contributed 13 points before she got into foul trouble. Richardson stepped onto the court and ran up nine points while freshman Carley Salerno contributed six of her own points.

"It's tough to lose in this type of situation," explained Levangie. "Chelsea, Gabby, and Sam are a big part of this team. Playing without them, we can't be too disappointed by the final score."

The second loss came at the hands of the league-leading Carver Crusaders in Cohasset on Feb. 3. Cohasset started the game with some good energy and managed to keep the score close through the first half.

Unfortunately for Flibotte, the refs in the first half did not take her aggressive playing very lightly. She faced foul trouble yet again in the second half, limiting her to 10 points. Grossman and Richardson supplied six points each while Lieb-Lappen took control of the rebounding.

Still, the Lady Skippers could not subdue the Crusader crush. As Carver controlled the second half, frustration emerged on the Cohasset bench. The Crusaders drove away with yet another league victory, this time by a score of 49-36.

"We didn't take this loss too hard," said Lieb-Lappen. "We played with them [Carver] for most of the game. This game proved we can compete with higher level teams."

The Lady Skippers know they will face teams like Carver in the tournament. So they must tighten their game even more if they want to climb up the tournament ladder and perhaps get a home game in the first round. After tonight's home game with Hull, Cohasset closes its schedule in Avon on Monday and at home against Norwell on Tuesday.

GIRLS TRAVEL BASKETBALL

8th graders continue torrid pace in SSL competition

The 8th graders played Halifax on Sunday, Jan. 29 and the result was the same as the last time these teams met; Cohasset won handily, 37-18.

Breaking a season long trend, this time the girls started the game quickly behind Lindsay Allard's six first half points. At halftime the hoopsters had a comfortable 18-7 lead. In the second half Tori Lehr rebounded strongly and scored 8 points. A particularly noteworthy play by Chelsea Silvia was a court length drive and pull-up jumper that banked perfectly off the glass. For the game the blue and white were led in scoring by Lehr with 12 (including 4 of 5 from the charity stripe), Allard with nine and Meredith Kelly with six.

This past weekend the travel team played a home-and-home series against the Abington Green Wave. Both teams entered Saturday night's contest with 8-2 records and tied for second place in the division. The evening did not start off well when one of Cohasset's top players, Meredith Kelly, was unable to play because of the flu. Then midway through the first half Allard had to leave the game with a head injury and early in the second half Isabelle Franklin had to go to the hospital to receive five stitches in her chin.

Regardless of these manpower issues, the team did not play well and Abington was on top of its game, scoring 15 straight points during one stretch on three-point shots and uncontested fast breaks. The final score was Abington 37 and Cohasset 16.

On Sunday, at home against the Green Wave, the V-Eights were able to shake-off the disappointing loss of the prior day and the absence again of Allard. Cohasset started strongly behind two quick baskets from Franklin. The first half action was intense and the 15-13 score at the intermission reflected this heated exchange.

In the second half Cohasset played their best defense of the entire year. Exclusively using a 1-2-2 half-court zone, Abington's high powered offense was limited to only four more points. Mimi Mahoney poured in five second half points and Franklin added six more. Cohasset won the game going away, 29 to 17, behind Mahoney's season high 10 points, Franklin's 10 points and Lehr's six points. Cohasset was able to shut off Abington's fast break by getting back on defense quickly in the transition. The hoopsters also looked for their outside shot on Sunday and made a number of long-range jumpers.

A key to the game was the inspired play of Mahoney, both offensively and defensively. But as usual, there were strong contributions by everyone in different areas of the game. Kelly continually slashed to the basket drawing defenders. Samantha Crough demonstrated her versatility by playing both guard and forward. Erin Fontaine provided steady ball handling and is always a threat to hit an outside shot. Lucy Noble was a rebounding force on the boards. Hannah Burgess played strong underneath, even though giving up several inches in height.

Finally, Silvia was able handle to break Abington's full court press. Cohasset is looking forward to having Allard back for the final four games and the playoffs.

7th graders dump Abington twice, move into third place

The Cohasset Seventh Graders continued their impressive play of the past three weeks, knocking off Abington twice in an old-fashioned, NBA-style, home-and-home series, to make it four wins in a row, the best-ever winning streak in So. Shore League play by the Seven-Ups.

The double-wins by the Blue & White were all the more impressive because the teams were tied for third place coming into the game and Abington, the regular season champ in the league last year, had defeated Cohasset in both of their encounters last season.

After getting off to a slow start in the Saturday evening contest (trailing 6-4 after seven minutes of play), the Seven-Ups came out of their 2-3 zone and picked up the tempo with a full-court, man-to-man defense which threw the Green Wave off-stride and created scoring opportunities off Abington turnovers. The result was an 11-8 advantage at the half.

Lindsay Davis drained two long-range buckets and Rachel Fredey, who enjoyed a career-high game with eight points, swished a 16 footer. (Rachel did it all against Abington, scoring on a jump shot, two free throws, a right-handed lay-up, and a left-handed lay-up.)

Abington tried to apply defensive pressure at the start of the second half, but the Cohasset girls broke the Green Wave press with ease, with five girls getting into the scoring column. The 11-8 Cohasset advantage at the intermission blossomed into a commanding 25-14 with about four minutes to go. However, just when it appeared that Cohasset was about to put the game away, Abington fought back, scoring two quick hoops to cut the Blue & White lead to 25-18.

But then the Cohasset backcourt tandem of Emma Quigley and Fredey put the daggers into the Green Wave's heart. Fredey scord on a left-handed lay-up (Rachel is right-handed) on a textbook Cohasset fast break in which Quigley took the outlet pass, dribbled to half court, and then hit the streaking Fredey down the left side, who laid the ball in under pressure.

When Abington answered that bucket, it was Quigley's turn on a fast break opportunity, taking the ball to the hoop against two Abington defenders, making the basket, and drawing the foul. Emma Q's successful conversion of the foul shot for the three point play boosted the Cohasset lead back into double digits, 30-20, with about 3:30 to go, and it was lights out for the Green Wave.

The Cohasset second half tidal wave of 23 points was the most-ever in a half for the Seven-Ups. Carli Haggerty led the Blue & White scoring parade with 13 points, Fredey popped in eight, Kate French and Davis hit for four, Quigley had three, and Emma Musto sank a bucket.

The Cohasset girls once again started slowly in Sunday's return match in the CHS gym, falling behind early 6-2. But as they did the night before, the girls picked up the pace with some man-to-man pressure which led to Abington turnovers and Cohasset break-outs. The Blue & White offense resumed its torrid pace and accumulated 20 first half points. However, the Green Wave also went on an offensive tear, hitting a number of outside shots, and were hanging in at the intermission trailing by only three, 20-17.

However, Cohasset was hampered at the start of the second half by the loss of two of their point guards, Quigley (who had sprained her ankle the night before and who did not suit up) and Davis, who also suffered an ankle injury on a drive to the hoop late in the first half.

As a result, the Cohasset offense sputtered in the early going of the second half. Fortunately, Abington also went cold, as neither team could buy a bucket for the first five minutes. However, the pace soon began to pick up and Cohasset, bolstered by the return of Davis, parried every Abington thrust.

A key bucket was made by French when Abington had taken a 23-22 lead with under three minutes to play. Kate took an outlet pass at half court and drove to the hoop with a Green Wave defender draped all over. She made the bucket to give the lead back to Cohasset. After Haggerty made a hoop to make it 26-23, Abington responded to make it a one-point affair, 26-25, with under 2:00 to go.

Both teams took turns either throwing the ball away or missing their shots until Musto broke out at half court, drove into the lane amidst three Green Wave defenders, and then tossed up a spinning, looping shot which swished cleanly through the twine with 25 seconds to play for a 28-25 Cohasset lead. Abington got the ball back twice in that span and managed a three point attempt, but the ball clanged off the front-rim and then bounced over the basket at the buzzer, leaving the Cohasset girls with the victory.

Haggerty led Cohasset with nine points and French had eight, Davis and Musto scored four each and Carly Martin added a nice hoop on a follow-up of her missed FT. Amy Costa also added a big free throw when she came off the bench to take Davis's place at the free throw line when Lindsey was injured on her drive to the hoop in the first half. A key ingredient for the Seven-Ups was their free throw shooting, as they sank eight on the game (on 16 attempts) compared to four for Abington.

The Cohasset Seven-Ups now have run off four straight wins and have moved into sole possession of third place in the South Shore League. They have set their sights on second place, presently held by Hanson, which would earn them a bye in the first round of the playoffs.

6th graders give it their all in games with Halifax, Abington

The injured and beleaguered 6th grade team took to the court two weeks ago against a Halifax team that has only lost a handful of games in two seasons. Neither team scored in the first five minutes and at the nine minute mark Halifax was up 4-0. However, outside shooting by an extremely athletic forward on the Halifax squad put the tally at 10-0.

Against a zone defense, Cohasset moved the ball well around the outside, however, the Blue & White had difficulty getting the ball inside to its forwards. In the first half, many shots went up from the floor, but they just weren't dropping. Allie Farren put up the squad's first points on an inbound play. Halifax added a basket just before the close of the half, putting the score at 12-2.

In the second half the game continued to be very physical, and the Cohasset squad led by Watson Leffel and Isabel Robinson fought hard for rebounds, shots and loose balls. Pressure defense on the Halifax ball handler by Ellie Tedeschi and Olivia Franklin upset Halifax play, and held the team to just four points in the second half.

Robinson pulled down defensive rebounds that sparked Cohasset, but points were difficult to convert. Off an offensive rebound, Farren dropped one in, bringing the score to 14-4. Jenn Mullin later added two with a jumper from the top of the key. The team did get to the foul line and Anna Serakis handled the ball well at point, however, they were unable to overcome the point deficit created in the first half and Halifax took the game 16-6.

With a six person squad, the 6th grade girls traveled to Abington for the first of a weekend double header. Cohasset took an early 4-0 lead when Farren dropped in two quick baskets for the Blue & White. Tedeschi and Robinson each drew fouls on drives to hoop earning visits to the line, but both were unable to convert. A couple of outside shots by Abington tied the score at 4-4.

Cohasset pulled ahead on a fast break basket by Tedeschi. Down the defensive end of the court, Leffel pulled down five first half rebounds, blocked two shots during the contest, and had two low post steals. At the top of the key, Franklin and Seraikis pressured the Abington guards, creating turnovers and steals. A fast break basket put Abington up at the half, 8-6.

Cohasset faced full court pressure in the second half and the Abington defense created scoring opportunities that increased their lead to 13-6. Tired, with only one substitute, Cohasset never let up for a second. With four minutes remaining in the game, Franklin continued to keep the Abington offense at bay, tying up the ball giving Cohasset possession. Cohasset then cut the lead to four when Farren hit the front end of a 1-and-1 and Seraikis added a basket off an inbound play.

A foul shot and basket put Abington back in command with a 16-9 lead. Seraikis drew a foul, but missed the 1-and-1. With precious time left on the clock, Leffel scored twice on offensive rebounds to put the score at 16-13. With just seconds remaining, Robinson stole the ball and drove the court but time ran out.

Boys travel hoop in back-to-back action

Great hoop action took place in the CMHS gym last Saturday, as the boys travel squads battled Hull and all three teams came out victorious.

The sixers hit the pine first and went on a 12-2 run, as Robbie Mahoney, Jamie Faber and Christian Allard took charge. Mahoney hit two free throws, Faber hit a bucket and Allard dropped a three pointer that set the tone for the rest of the game. Chris Lunde and Pat MacCormack added great defensive and offensive support for the team which lead 19-10 at the half.

Faber started the second half with a nice 14-foot jumper and he had the hot hand for the rest of the game. But once again, it was great defensive and the now famous eagle trap, that kept the boys in blue on top. Morgan McCarthy and Patrick Kearney played awesome defensively ripping down rebounds and stealing the ball. Charlie Neaves and Danny Barnes kept the top of the key protected from any Hull penetration. Power forward Jay Salerno summed up the action by commenting, "It was a good game overall."

The sevens started in the same fashion, running up a 12-0 run. KJ Pontes, as usual, was a monster on the offensive boards. Sam "sure hands" Richardson got in on the action, driving to the hoop and getting fouled. He sunk both shots from the charity stripe. Jack Carrier maintained superior positioning on offense, snaring many rebounds. It was 37-7 at the half.

The second half started with Eric Wasel at the line, hitting one of two. Robert Jones fed Gabe Seksay for a bucket, and he was promptly fouled and made the shot. Mike Monaco dropped a bucket. Derek Youngman and Ben Campbell controlled the offense with patience and precision passing. Justin Liburd and Alex Harper gave the boys in blue speed and aggressive defense. Cohasset won 55-31.

The 8's finished the action against a much bigger Hull squad. Johnny Maher won the tip and the boys were rocking and rolling. Maher hit for a bucket, then Will Wise hit for two. Maher had a defensive steal and fed Robbie McCunney for a fastbreak bucket.

But Hull was tallying basket for basket. It was a scrappy game with bodies, particularly Brendan Doonan's and John Kearney's flying all over the floor. Dana Valentine came up big with defensive rebounding and and a tip in on a missed shot. McCunney blocked a shot and then fed Jeff Charles for a bucket that put Cohasset on top.

Despite the size advantage of Hull, Cohasset protected the paint and forced Hull into a perimeter game. Taylor McQuade, Valentine, Maher and Dan Sullivan played bigger than Hull and used positioning to box Hull off the boards.

In the second half, the 8's came out strong. Maher fed Kearney who split the defense and came up with a hoop. Cohasset stopped Hull, and it was Kearney who really ignited the Cohasset offense with a 3 pointer. With less than 5 minutes left, the game was tied. Wise made a strong drive to the hoop, made the shot and was fouled. His shot from the stripe put Cohasset ahead. Valentine and McCunney finished the scoring for Cohasset and at the buzzer it was Cohasset 38, Hull 37.

On Super Bowl Sunday the teams traveled to Taunton, but someone forgot to tell the Taunton sixth graders that they had a game, leading to a forfeit. Cohasset scrimmaged a group of Taunton kids including a few 8th graders and the boys in blue stayed in the game.

The first half was unremarkable, but by the second half the Taunton sixers showed. Perhaps they shouldn't have. Cohasset went on a 23-0 run in the second half and won on the court. McCarthy, Barnes and Lunde played inspired ball for Cohasset.

The 7's played Taunton fiercely from opening tip off through overtime. The usual tandem of Pontes, Jones, Campbell, Seksay and Youngman kept the pressure on Taunton. They executed their trademark brand of team ball, fast breaking at every opportunity. Jones to Pontes was the theme of the game as Jones found Pontes open in the paint.

By the second half, Taunton had Pontes number, and Jones sank shot after shot. Taunton employed a half court press that stymied Cohasset for just a bit. Campbell, though, faked a pass to Wasel, pulled back and hit a 12-foot jumper to put his team ahead. Carrier and Wasel provided fresh legs in the paint, and kept Taunton from second and third opportunities while scoring themselves.

Pontes and Seksay delivered three consecutive blocked shots that quieted the Taunton crowd, but a couple of 3 pointers got them back in the game. Jones then hit Harper for a bucket to go ahead. The lead went back and forth and in to overtime and the 7's won the game 51-50.

The 8's finished the action but didn't have the basketball gods on their side. Early turnovers and cold shooting caused the 8's to be on the low end of the score. Doonan and Sullivan played well for Cohasset. Sully had seven rebounds by the half. The 8's lost 51-30 and ended their five game win streak.

Ski team sidelined but not girls' hoop

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTOPHER PESCATORE

February is here, isn't it? February is supposed to be the heart of winter, however, this year it feels like the heart of spring. The Cohasset Ski Team strapped on their ski racks in December and prepared for what was expected to be a devastating winter. Unfortunately, still without a heavy snowfall, the team has raced just once, and for many participants, the one was their first of the season.

Oh well, at least the Girls Varsity Basketball team is tearing it up in the South Shore League, while the Hockey team needs to win their next two games to clinch a berth in the State Tournament.

But enough on sports lets get to the exciting part of the week…school news! Let me tell you, with an all-new rendition of the award winning Spinnaker hitting the streets on Valentine's Day, the school is buzzing with excitement and love is in th_ air. Now for the news.

• Register online for the SAT's by Feb. 24th for the April 3rd test session or pick up a form in the high school guidance office.

• You can pick up Internet links for college scholarships in the high school guidance office. FAFSA forms and Summer School program pamphlets are also available in the guidance office.

• The High School Band and Chorus will be sending students to audition at SEMSBA this Saturday.

• Mr. Newkirk's Student Awareness Organization and National Honor Society will be participating in a Passion Plunge to benefit the Special Olympics on Feb. 11th at the Nantasket Beach in Hull.

• The NHS will also be sponsoring a car cleanout for the elderly.

• The high school seniors plan to invite the senior citizens at the Cohasset Elderly Affairs to have lunch with them in the upcoming events.

• The SAO visited Father Bill's this past weekend and plan to make a few more before the year is over. They also plan to organize a project that entails collecting old shoes to donate to the less fortunate kids in Afghanistan.

• It's not too early to start planning for the Relay for Life coming up in June.

• The Student Council is planning to begin the "Skipper of the Month", which will basically be the student of the month, voted on by the Student Council and faculty.

• The Watershed Academy will begin classes on the Wednesday after February vacation from 7-9 pm at the CSCR.

• Congrats to the Math Club who recently completed their season with a terrific record.

• The beautiful weather has allowed Mr. Buckley's Outdoor Education Class to trek over the hills and through the woods, and two students commented on their experience in the class so far. Robert Murley and Dan McCarthy said, "The temperature may be low, but the excitement level is outrageous."

It's a beautiful thing the way we make news in this school. Whether we're discussing the upcoming events or the past festivities, everything seems relevant and enticing. February vacation is coming up, and I think I speak for every senior when I say that a break is much needed given our grueling schedules this term. Who knows, maybe we'll get lucky soon and it will snow for a change…then again maybe not.

Watershed Academy to start March 8

The Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) invites students to join its Watershed Academy. The Watershed Academy is a series of instructional classes that will train students to conduct coastal research projects. In this Academy session, students will learn to identify urban NPS (Non Point Source) pollution impacting James Brook, a waterway that runs through Cohasset Center and empties into Cohasset Harbor. Once properly trained, Academy students will work with the town board of health and a private consultant to verify the James Brook drainage system, conduct water quality sampling, develop pollution load estimates, and identify appropriate storm water BMPs (Best Management Practices).

Classes will be held on Wednesday evenings from 7:15 – 9 p.m., beginning March 8 and continuing through April 26. Interested students should call CSCR at 781 383 0129, or email Jack Buckley at jbuckley.cscr@verizon.net. Student hours in the Academy may be transferable to course credit, upon approval of the student's host school. Don't miss this great opportunity!

Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research is a newly founded educational nonprofit organization that emphasizes research in the environmental sciences. Among its goals, CSCR's mission is to inspire students to become stewards of the region's marine environment; engage students in the study of coastal watershed issues; teach students how to research real environmental issues; encourage awareness about the environment; and promote activism within the community. CSCR is located at 40 Parker Ave in Cohasset. Visit: www.cscr.org.

OBITUARIES

Theodore O. Macklin

Lieutenant, U.S. Marines, WWII

Theodore O. Macklin

Theodore O. Macklin, Ph.D., 83, of Cohasset, died peacefully at his home on Feb. 3, 2006.

The son of Ora and Elizabeth (Mahan) Macklin, he was born in Lowell, and graduated from Lowell High School at the age of 16.

In 1942 he enlisted in the U.S. Marine Corps. After boot camp at Parris Island, S.C., he was ordered to Duke University in North Carolina for officer training, and before the end of World War II, had achieved the rank of first lieutenant. He served in the Pacific theater, primarily in Guam, the Marianas Islands, and China, and remained in the Marine Corps Reserves until 1958. He was particularly proud of his service as a China Marine, and felt a lifelong connection to China.

In 1948, Dr. Macklin graduated from Harvard College with a degree in psychology, and followed it with graduate studies at Duke and Boston University. As a psychologist, he served in many settings in the Greater Boston area. He was a staff member at Massachusetts General Hospital, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Carney Hospital, Mass. Association for the Blind, and Westwood Lodge, among other places. He was a consultant to the Quincy Public Schools, a therapist at St. Paul's Rehabilitation Center for the Blind in Newton, and an instructor of psychology at Catherine Laboure School of Nursing. He was a director of pupil services and school psychologist at Brockton Public Schools for many years. Dr. Macklin was a fellow in the American Orthopsychiatric Association.

A resident of Cohasset since 1959, he was very active in the community, serving as Commodore and founding trustee of the Cohasset Sailing Club, president and director of the South Shore Art Center, and professional advisory council member of the Social Service League. In addition, he served on the Cohasset Harbor Committee and was chairman of the Harbor Bicentennial Committee. He was deeply involved with the development of youth hockey programs in Cohasset, including the Tars and Bantam Youth Hockey, peewees and juniors. He was commissioner of the Cohasset Executive Hockey League and played for the Cohasset Flyers.

Dr. Macklin had great wit and humor and always had a warm smile, a twinkle in his eye and a friendly joke or riddle for family and friends alike. He loved to sing, especially Irish melodies, and read and write poetry. As a devoted family man, he traveled with his family on many exciting vacations throughout the country. Through his mother, he developed a great love for Ireland and Irish music and was able to visit her home of birth in Darragh, Country Clare, Ireland.

His love of life and his family was expressed the day before he died in a note to his daughter, saying, "In truth, life is delicious, and mother and I have lots to laugh about and feel good about. I think we're in love."

He leaves his beloved wife, Marie C. (Moriarty) Macklin; five loving children, Linda of Germantown, Md., Theodore Jr. of Mclean, Va., Chris of South Portland, Maine, Steven of Ludlow, Vt., and Brian of Anchorage, Alaska; and nine grandchildren. He was the brother of the Late Eileen Macklin.

A Funeral Mass was celebrated Tuesday, in St. Anthony Church, Cohasset. Arrangements by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Interment is in V.A. National Cemetery, in Bourne.

Contributions in Dr. Macklin's memory may be made to St. Anthony's Church, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Worked many years for Quincy Y.M.C.A.

Rita (Donlan) Logan, 84, a Cohasset resident for 53 years, died Feb. 2, 2006, at the Norwell Knoll Rehabilitation and Nursing Center, after a long illness.

Born in Dorchester, she graduated from Girls' High School in Boston. Trained in therapeutic massage, she worked for many years at the Quincy Y.M.C.A. Mrs. Logan spent the final period of her working career with New England Telephone Company, as a coordinator for field engineers.

Upon her retirement in 1984, she traveled and divided her years between residences in Cohasset and Sarasota, Fla. Mrs. Logan enjoyed poetry, Dixieland jazz, and places by the sea.

Kayaking trek is Key to amazing discoveries

By David Raterman
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

BIG PINE KEY, Fla. — Bill Keogh was dipping his paddle on opposite sides of his kayak while gliding over water that shimmered blue from the sky.

"If you open your eyes, you can see anything from dolphins to turtles, bald eagles, sharks, stingrays, even little creatures like single-cell algae," he said. "You get unexpected surprises when you're on the water this close."

Keogh runs a kayak outfitter at the Old Wooden Bridge Fishing Camp here, and I joined him and two other customers for a three-hour trip. We were paddling through Bogie Channel, which cuts through Big Pine and No Name keys.

Fortunately for us, Keogh really knows these waters. In 2004 he published "The Florida Keys Paddling Guide," which includes a sea turtle guide and birding checklist.

Suddenly, to the near left of our procession, we heard a splash and turned to see shiny fish leaping through the air. And a pelican was already diving toward them.

"Those are needlefish," Keogh explained. "Pelicans'll dive for them when they're jumping to escape the teeth of barracudas. Pelicans'll charge in on any feeding frenzy."

After this slight drama faded, Keogh resumed paddling and we followed. No Name stood straight ahead, and to the distant right the sky and sea blended together: There was no horizon line.

"What you smell is the stench of decomposing grasses floating to the surface, or into this area from Florida Bay," Keogh said as we stroked our kayaks forward. "They form hydrogen and sulfur gases."

We all now paid attention to this third sense, and indeed the air reeked.

Kayakers

I looked through the shallow water to the swaying sea grass — it felt like I was paragliding over a breezy Illinois prairie — and soon saw several circular objects that looked like old car tires covered with vegetation.

They were loggerhead sponges, our guide explained.

Keogh pointed to an anchored white boat, which he said was used to hook the sponges. In deeper water, a boater was catching dwarf sea horses to sell.

After we silently observed the marine goings-on while bobbing on the slightly rippling sea, Keogh led us right up to the sponge boat.

A dinghy was tethered to it and held a freakish scarecrow. From a distance Keogh exclaimed, "Smells like guano, doesn't it? Spongers drop their catches there to die and dry out, and the birds love it."

We were paddling through the Great White Heron National Wildlife Refuge, which overlaps the National Key Deer Refuge. Amid such protection, the fauna thrives.

We paddled to a tiny No Name Key cove that was dense with red mangroves and their propped roots. The water stood 2 feet, and we could see scores of what appeared to be upside-down jellyfish.

"What are those?" I asked.

"Upside-down jellyfish," Keogh said.

I looked quizzically.

"That's the name," he said with a smile. He paused, then rattled off a Latin name for the species.

"There's lots of unusual stuff out here," he said.

We paddled onward and soon reached a small opening in the dense mangrove forest. Keogh described it as a tidal creek that fills and empties with the tide.

As he maneuvered into it, a yellow-crowned night heron flew past us. A few seconds later a great egret flew by, and on a mangrove scrambled a mangrove tree crab. Under the kayaks swam mangrove snapper.

We paddled at first, then pushed off roots as the path narrowed, then with our hands pulled ourselves forward while occasionally limboing under fallen branches.

All the while Keogh regaled us with details such as the fact early pioneers would use a few mangrove leaves as soup seasoning.

Where the creek tapered to an end, we just sat. For maybe 15 of the calmest minutes possible we just looked and listened — to nature, and occasionally to Keogh.

He told us how the tiny, endangered Key deer, which live almost exclusively on Big Pine and No Name, nimbly jump over the expansive mangrove roots, and he talked about a 19th-century Russian fruit farmer who was paid in gold by Cuban revolutionaries to allow training on his land — the gold supposedly still is buried around here somewhere.

After leaving the tidal creek we paddled along more mangroves, and twice Keogh said he saw a baby nurse shark, although the rest of us didn't find it.

Paddling hard across Bogie Channel, we broke a sweat and finally got a good burn in our arms.

But even as we strained to reach land, Keogh couldn't resist telling us more, this time about the various fish that are caught in the channel.

For more information, call 305-872-7474 or go to www.keyskayaktours.com. Big Pine Key is a two-hour drive from Miami. Reservations for the kayak trips ($50 per person) are required.

Miniature deer on Big Key

Encounter with endangered Key deer

By David Raterman
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

BIG PINE KEY, Fla. — They were miniature deer. Bambis, but not babies. Barely taller than the multicolored chickens skittering around this Lower Key.

My friend John and I were squatting in front of a dozen endangered Key deer that were foraging on plants and handouts next to the Big Pine Key Lion's Club. I had extended my hand in an attempt to get closer, also aware that the animals might approach because they thought I had food; near us two Canadian-accented seniors were tossing them popcorn even though feeding the deer is illegal, and unhealthy (for the deer).

On Big Pine Key and the surrounding islands live up to 800 Key deer, a subspecies of the white-tailed deer that bound throughout much of North America. These tiny, tawny ruminants weigh about 70 pounds, with does standing only 26 inches high at the shoulders and bucks standing 30 inches high.

Scientists theorize that white-tailed deer migrated here when most of the Keys were connected by nature, not by the frenzied Overseas Highway (U.S. 1).

When glaciers from the Wisconsin Ice Age melted 10,000 years ago, oceans rose and turned Florida's southern highlands into islands. All creatures that couldn't swim or fly were stranded.

Adapting over the millennia to their small-islands habitat, the species shrank in size. And then came the humans.

By 1957, when the 8,600-acre National Key Deer Refuge was established, only 27 Key deer were living.

Two of the animals coyly sauntered toward my outstretched hand, then stopped three feet away and stared. One was a fawn, and I guessed the other was its mother.

The fawn's coat was dappled black, gray and white, and its mom's was light brown.

The mom twinkled her nose at me before she and the fawn darted away.

An evening to remember Etrusco

Historical Society marks 50th anniversary of grounding with gala event

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Fifty years ago next month, Giovanni Belfiore's ship came in.

The 18-year-old junior officer was the youngest crewmember aboard the Italian freighter Etrusco which was grounded March 16, 1956 on Cedar Point during a powerful nor'easter.

Belfiore, now 68 and retired after a life spent at sea working on board container and cruise ships, remembers with remarkable clarity the events of that stormy March night a half-century ago. It is with great fondness he recalls the hospitality of the small seaside community where he and his fellow shipmates were pulled ashore and literally given shelter from the storm.

The 7,000-ton, 444-foot-long cargo ship was bound for Boston out of Emden, Germany, where Etrusco had unloaded a cargo of mineral from Tunisia. The ship was riding light —"in ballast"— with no cargo on board when it cruised into harm's way off the Massachusetts coast. The freighter was scheduled to pick up a load of grain in Boston before heading back across the Atlantic to deliver it to Romania,

The grounded Italian Freighter Etrusco became a major tourist attraction during its 9-month stay in Scituate in 1956. Thousands flocked to town to get a look at the 7,000-ton vessel parked outside Scituate Lighthouse.

but it never made it into Boston Harbor. A howling Atlantic storm scrapped the Etrusco's itinerary, and in driving the ship ashore in Scituate forever changed its history, and the town's

On March 10, the Scituate Historical Society will remember that amazing piece of the town's maritime heritage at a special dinner program marking the 50th anniversary of Etrusco's unexpected port of call in Scituate. The gala event will be held at the Barker Tavern beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Scituate Historical Society President David Ball said tickets are selling fast for the event, which will feature cocktails, dinner, and a power-point presentation on the history of Etrusco and its lasting legacy. Members of the Etrusco Associates – a non-profit organization that lends medical equipment to South Shore residents at no charge – will also be on hand to remember the giant freighter for which they were named, and to honor their own volunteers.

There will be many special guests and speakers, according to Ball. Many who remember first-hand the Etrusco's grounding and nine-month stay on Cedar Point and the incredible impact it had on Scituate and the entire South Shore.

The grounding in Scituate was a frightening experience for Belfiore and the entire crew, which after several hours aboard the vessel, left without steam power in the grounding, were pulled safely to shore via breeches buoys. Jim Howard was 22 years old when the Etrusco went aground and found himself in charge of communications during the rescue after the storm stranded the Coast Guard's radio truck in Marshfield. A Ham radio operator who worked with the Civil Defense group in town, Howard played a key role in conveying information back and forth to the Coast Guard at the scene, at Point Allerton in Hull and the Scituate Station during the dark stormy hours overnight. Ball said Howard, who winters

HSO presents 'Peter and the Wolf'

On Saturday, Feb. 11, Hingham Symphony Orchestra shares the magic of classical music with young and old alike. The annual Discovery Concerts introduce audiences to timeless classical music, the musicians who bring it alive and the instruments they play.

This year's program features the enchanting "Peter and the Wolf," narrated by BSO bassist Larry Wolfe. Sergei Prokofiev's famous symphony, written in Russia in 1936, is a perfect introduction to the orchestra. Each character in the story is represented by a different instrument, playing easily recognizable musical themes. The interwoven strains of flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, French horn, trumpet, trombone, percussion and strings take on a life of their own to tell a story that will entertain all ages.

The full orchestra also performs other lively works, and then presents an Instrument Showcase, where audience members visit with the musician up close, learning more about each instrument. HSO Discovery Concerts have been known to strongly influence budding young musicians — helping them choose an instrument to play or reinforcing their enthusiasm for a newfound skill. Even longtime symphony-goers will discover something new.

Two concerts will be held at the Inly School, Route 123 in Scituate, Feb. 11 at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Tickets are $20 for adults, $15 seniors, $8 youth through age 18, and are available at Front Street Books, Scituate; Marsh's, Norwell; Hingham Public Library; Buttonwood Books in Cohasset; or call 781-740-5694, or visit: www.hingham-symphony.org.

in Sarasota and spends the warmer months of the year in Scituate, plans to attend the anniversary gala and share his recollections.

After the 30 crew members were rescued they found comfort in the home of Italian-born Lina Russo, in front of whose Lighthouse Road home the Etrusco seemed to be parked. Russo spoke the crew's native tongue and warmed the men with steaming pots of espresso and her gracious hospitality. After the crew moved on to the Boston Seaman's Friends Society before returning home to Italy, Russo allowed her house to become the command post for retired Navy Admiral Lebbeus Curtis, who devised a plan and led the effort to get the big ship off the beach and back afloat.

As the complicated salvage effort dragged on throughout the spring and into the summer, Scituate found itself flooded with curious tourists, eager to a glimpse of the giant freighter that literally dwarfed the lighthouse, which stood in its shadow.

Lena Russo's granddaughter, Linda Yarosh recalls how enormous the ship seemed to her from her bedroom window. Then just 7 years old, Yarosh recalls those hectic days and weeks when her grandmother's house seemed constantly full of people – first Italian crew members and rescue workers, then salvage crews and journalists. Her grandmother welcomed them all with coffee and cakes and heaping plates of pasta. Yarosh, too, plans to attend next month's dinner, and offer her reminiscences, Ball said.

But no speaker will be more anticipated than Belfiore, whose video interview will be shown during the dinner. Historical Society Trustee Tom Hall traveled to Italy last summer to interview Belfiore about his experience aboard Etrusco. His poor health is the only thing preventing Belfiore from being at the anniversary event in person.

In addition to speakers, Ball and Historical Society Trustee Fred Freitas hope to have copies of their updated book on the Etrusco — "Etrusco From Cradle to Grave"— which will include a new chapter telling the story of how the historical society came in contact with Belfiore, the first of the crewmembers reached since that fateful night nearly five decades ago.

Now, 68 and retired after a life and career at sea, Giovanni Belfiore won't be able to attend the anniversary celebration in person due to poor health, but a video interview taken last summer will be shown.

"It'll be a fun and informative evening for everyone," said Ball, who tried to consider every possible detail in planning the event. The food served will have an Italian influence, and the music will be appropriate to the 1950s era, he said.

Etrusco Associates President Jean Hoogeveen is thrilled to be a part of the big Etrusco party and said many of those who have served the agency as volunteers and board members since its founding by Allan Wheeler in 1957, will be honored. Now serving nine South Shore communities, Etrusco is busier than ever, Hoogeveen said. "There are more people who know we're here now," she said. To reach those who don't, Hoogeveen said she plans to have pamphlets on the Etrusco Associates on every table the night of the anniversary celebration. "This is going to be a biggie," she said of the dinner. "I'm looking forward to it."

Tickets for the Etrusco 50th anniversary dinner are $50 and include an invitation to the pre-opening of a new Etrusco exhibit on display at the Maritime Museum from March 11 through the end of the year. Tickets are available at Scituate Historical Society Headquart-ers – the Little Red Schoolhouse – on Cudworth Road. For more information, call 781-545-1083.

Historical Society Spring Lecture Series

The Cohasset Historical Society begins its spring lecture series Wednesday, Feb. 15 with a talk by Steve Bobo on the "History of Our Harbor." All programs are held at the society's headquarters in the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., Cohasset, at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free and open to the public. Light refreshments will be served.

From the fishing schooners of the 19th century to the 20th century luxury yachts, Cohasset Harbor's waters hold many stories of the changes that affected the economy and lifestyle in this quiet little seaside town. Bobo, who has a life long affection for maritime history, shares some stories and their relationship to the town and its people.

Other programs planned for the series include a discussion of the mackerel fishing industry with Susan Playfair on April 19, and a talk on courtship and marriage in the post-revolutionary war generation by Tim Kenslea on May 17.

'Critters, Etc...' exhibit embraces the absurd

By Matthew Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Art can be profound. It can be intellectual, emotional, spiritual, enlightening or even disturbing.

And sometimes art can simply be fun and entertaining.

Laura Harvey finds her creative niche in this realm of the visual arts universe.

The Marshfield artist explores these possibilities in both two-and three-dimensional mixed media work, usually with a keen, quirky sense of the absurd and inspiration drawn from the animal planet.

Harvey displays her unique artistry from this perspective and a two-dimensional focus in her latest solo exhibit, "...Critters, Etc.," on view in the Service Bar area at Bella's Restaurant, Route 228, Rockland, through February.

The show is actually one of the first results of a collaboration of sorts between Bella's and Marshfield's North River Arts Society, where Harvey works weekday mornings as office manager. Bella's bar manager Vivien Harlow is also an artist member and student at NRAS, and last summer approached Harvey with the idea of launching an exhibit series at Bella's featuring a revolving cast of NRAS artists.

"I like art to be fun and humorous, something for people to have a good time with. I take art seriously when I work on it, but I always try to not take myself too seriously," said Harvey at last Sunday's opening reception at Bella's.

All sorts of animals, horses, barnyard fowl and dogs make their way onto the canvas in Harvey's collection of critters.

North River Arts Society artist Laura Harvey poses with some of the quirky critters at the opening of her new exhibit at Bella's Restaurant in Rockland. "Critters, Etc..." will be on display through Feb. 24.

"I like art to be fun and humorous, something for people to have a good time with. I take art seriously when I work on it, but I always try to not take myself too seriously."
Laura Harvey

"In every artwork I do, there's always going to be whimsy, even with some of the junk object elements I use that are hard to find. I love to use a lot of color, and combine colors, and to use unusual subject matter," Harvey said.

Harvey's aim in the switch from her usual 3-D to 2-D images in "Critters" is in effort for "swapping dimension for size."

Most of her show's 11 works spotlight animal characters such as cats, dogs, rabbits, cows and barnyard fowl, some of them portraits of creatures who reside with the artist at her Green Harbor home, which also houses the studio where she creates her work.

With them, Harvey said she combines a variety of elements to add texture, depth and story, all of it rendered in colors that "just happen." Along with the animals with names such as "Stars and Stripes," "Onree the Magni-ficent," "Sir Charles" and "A Mighty Bird," there's even a glimpse of Woodstock-era nostalgia with the 1960s Volkswagon Van image of "Magic Bus."

"Two dimensional work is a whole new realm for me. I'm still using texture, but I'm really enjoying working large," Harvey said.

Laura Harvey's exhibit "Critters, Etc..." will be on display at Bella's Restaurant, 933 Hingham Street in Rockland through Feb. 24. For more information call the North River Arts Society at 781-837-8091.

Movie review

Bank security specialist Jack Stanfield (Harrison Ford) is put in a compromising position by the nasty Bill Cox (Paul Bettany).

Ford rises above shaky "Wall'

Firewall (B+)

JAMES VERNIERE
FILM CRITIC

In "Firewall," 63-year-old action-hero Harrison Ford becomes a poster boy for ibuprofen and glucosamine.

Best known as the screen's Han Solo and Indiana Jones, Ford is bank security specialist Jack Stanfield here, an accomplished man with a sexy wife (Virginia Madsen) and two children rather young for someone his age (Are they Jack's second family?).

Jack, his wife Beth and their son and daughter live in splendor in suburban Seattle in a modern, multi-million-dollar house on a lake, and while Jack doesn't like the creepy suit (a glowering Robert Patrick), who's newly overseeing his work, life is sweet.

That is until a bill collector shows up at the bank and calls Jack a deadbeat in front of his new boss and colleagues.

Apparently, someone has stolen Jack's identity and is making his dolce vita not so dolce. Things get worse when criminal mastermind and unrepentant killer Bill Cox (Paul Bettany of "Master and Commander" and "A Knight's Tale" in the Alan Rickman role) and his team of heavily armed ninja-hackers take over Jack's house, hold his wife and children hostage and demand . . . well, you know the drill.

Routine in most ways, "Firewall" gets a jolt of adrenaline from Ford's always-reliable screen presence, Madsen's new confidence since winning acclaim for her turn in the 2004 comedy "Sideways" and Bettany's heavy — a milk-colored reptile.

Directed by Richard Loncraine ("Wimbeldon"), who is recycling his 1987 thriller "Bellman and True," "Firewall" goes through the motions — the resourceful kids in peril, the henchmen who range from utterly despicable to faintly sympathetic, sudden ultra-violent outbreaks and, of course, the ingenious tricks the captives use to outsmart their captors. It's "Panic Room" for "Air Force One" and "Fugitive" fans.

In some ways, "Firewall" is an exploration of our high-tech-inspired, modern-day paranoia and suggests a pop-movie version of the French existential thriller "Cache."

But the film asks an awful lot of people who actually pay attention. Why, for example, doesn't Jack just pass a note saying he and his family are being held hostage when he's sent to the bank to do the dirty work? And why do these bad guy know all there is to know about the Stanfields, but not a certain high-tech detail involving the family dog? Oh, you hairsplitting jerks.

How bad is the bad guy? Bad enough to feed Jack's son (Jimmy Bennett) nuts even though he knows he's deadly allergic – shades of the diabetic daughter in "Panic Room." As this hints, "Firewall" is often tech-outs and strictly by the numbers.

Still, it's undeniably fun to watch Jack "MacGyver" piece together a helpful device consisting of his daughter's MP3 player, the scan head from a fax machine, a Tickle Me Elmo doll (OK, I made that last bit up) and, of course, duct tape.

"I'm gonna find my dog," an enraged Jack declares near the film's climax, by which he means, "It's clobbering time, Fido." And I must admit I was awed by Ford's continued ability to play a fight scene like a, umm, 40-year-old stunt man. It really is Harrison up there getting the stuffing kicked out of him and being tossed through a window. But I suppose the prospect of Ford's salary would make all of us happily go to the gym and jump out windows, too. I know I would.

Rated PG-13. "Firewall" contains graphic violence and profanities.

LISTEN To Life

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

A PREGNANT PAUSE

For decades, experts thought that pregnancy could worsen otosclerosis, a disease associated with hearing loss. Primarily a genetic disease, otosclerosis causes one of the bones of the inner ear to become fixed so that it no longer vibrates or transmits sound. Those who suffer from the disease can often successfully address the problem by wearing a hearing instrument or undergoing corrective surgery. For years, medical experts believed that otosclerosis was exacerbated by pregnancy. Recently, however, one expert noticed that, among ultra-orthodox women with otosclerosis (women who often have large families), there appeared to be no worse hearing loss than among women with fewer children. This finding helped disprove the notion that pregnancy worsens hearing loss in those with otosclerosis.

When any hearing impairment is suspected, a painless, comprehensive hearing test is in order. It can indicate whether the problem can be helped with amplification by a hearing aid, surgery, or medication. At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, our hearing tests are state-of-the-art, conducted, and the results evaluated by, a highly skilled Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist with advanced training in the art of helping the hearing impaired. If this sounds like it might be the solution to your hearing problems, why not give us a call at 781-337-1144, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth. Visit us on the web at www.familyhearing.net

P.S. Otosclerosis affects women twice as often as men.

Marjorie "Margie" Steele says getting involved with the food pantry "seemed like an easy way to help the community." That was more than 13 years ago and she's been involved ever since.

Margie Steele is Citizen of the Year

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

After just a few minutes with Marjorie Steele it becomes clear why so many Cohasset residents over the years have felt comfortable enough to sit down with her and explain why they need help.

Steele, who is affectionately called "Margie," has a relaxed, friendly manner and a warm, compassionate smile that puts one immediately at ease.

Those qualities coupled with the intangible ability to be discrete are critical to having ensured over the years that the Cohasset Food Pantry is able to serve people in times of need.

That is no easy feat in an affluent town that is better known for its million-dollar homes and households with incomes well into the six figures, than those who may have hit hard times because they've lost their jobs or are elderly citizens who cannot make ends meet on Social Security checks.

School committee race heating up

Flynn, Buckley pull papers to run

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

School committee incumbent Rick Flynn announced in January, that after six years on the board, he would not run for re-election. This week he added a little excitement to the race, when he announced he has changed his mind.

"I've been thinking about running again for a while, and I decided this weekend. There is more business to be done, and I thought my experience could be beneficial to the committee. It just wasn't the right time to leave," he said.

Flynn, who has three sons, including one at the middle school, one at college, and one at B.C. High, has a historical perspective on the school's budget process, which could be beneficial at a time when the school budget is front and center for the school committee.

Flynn said unlike last year, a lot of people are coming forward to work for an override, which he says is an good sign. "It's encouraging to see young families become active." He said it is also important that the town and school committee support Supt. of Schools Dr. Denise Walsh, whom he describes as a seasoned professional who has transformed the budget process.

There are currently two open three-year seats on the board, and Flynn, along with 272 N. Main Street resident

Border collies are in the dog house

Alleged attacks subject of hearing

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

A group of border collies is causing some concern in town. While the owner of the dogs says they are sweet and gentle animals, several residents who were allegedly bitten by the dogs tell a different story.

Due to the number of complaints filed about the dogs, Animal Control officer Paul Murphy requested a vicious dog hearing with Town Manager Bill Griffin, who serves as the town's dog hearing officer. That meeting was held yesterday (Thursday, Feb. 16) after the Mariner went to press.

John Dean of Meadow Lane owns the border collies. He has nine dogs, two of which are the parents of the others. The dogs are pure bred, and are registered with the American Border Collie Association. By nature, border collies are sheep-herding dogs, and therefore require lots of open space to run and get their exercise. "To us, they are the sweetest animals we've ever known," he said.

Dean's home abuts land owned by the Cohasset Conservation Trust. Last August, he said he was out walking with seven of the dogs on the conservation property when the path they were walking on joined another. Resident Donald Staszko was walking the other path, and when the dogs saw him, Dean said they

Powdery white snow pushes cleanup budget into the red

But timing kept folks off streets

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Mild winter weather thus far had Cohasset right within its spending limits in terms of the snow and ice budget. However, Sunday's storm, which brought more than a foot of snow to town, has pushed that figure into a deficit.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said the Department of Public Works is still working on compiling the figure for the total cost. However, he said the fiscal 2006 snow and ice budget was $51,000, "and we had just used it up before the storm."

Director of Finance Michael Buckley explained the snow and ice budget is the only budget for which the state allows towns to have a temporary deficit. Buckley said before the town sets the next year's tax rate, "You have to find a way to pay for it," and usually in Cohasset, that money comes from free cash.

"Everything's expensive when you're dealing with the snow, but you've got to get it done."
— DPW Supt. Carl Sestito

DPW Superintendent Carl Sestito said during the storm, all 12 of the town's DPW employees as well as 14 private contractors responded to help clear the streets. "Some came in about 3:30 p.m., and hit the roads with sand and salt," he said. Around 7 p.m., Sestito said everyone was called out to help plow the streets, and when people started finishing up their routes, he began sending them home around 8 p.m.

Just before the storm, Sestito said he had ordered one load of salt for $1,500. "Everything's expensive when you're dealing with the snow, but you've got to get it done" he said.

Sestito said overall, the storm was pretty typical for a New England winter. "Sometimes the visibility was not very good," but his crew was able to clear the streets well enough to allow students to attend school Monday morning.

Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling said the storm was a "classic."

"It was a classic New England nor'easter that brought over a foot of wind-blown powdery snow with visibility near zero at times," he said. "The storm is now officially known as 'The Pre-Valentine's Day Blizzard of 2006'."

Police Chief James Hussey said he was very pleased from a police safety standpoint with the way things went. "Only one car slid off the road and it didn't hit another car," he said, adding fortunately, for the most part, people stayed off the roads, which made it much easier for the DPW to do its job.

"I came down here Sunday for a few hours anticipating the

Cohasset Mariner wins top honors

The New England Press Association has recognized the Cohasset Mariner with a first place award in its annual Better Newspaper Contest. The Cohasset Mariner placed first in its circulation class for having the best editorial pages, according to judges for 2005 New England Better Newspaper Competition.

Judges said the Cohasset Mariner has a "classic editorial section."

"Its opinion pages contain editorials which not only point out concerns but offered solutions, then went beyond by opening the pages to commentary from knowledgeable sources," the judges said. "A local editorial cartoon and numerous letters to the editor were frosting on the cake."

Editor Mary Ford said being recognized for the editorial and op-ed pages is a true honor.

"The Cohasset Mariner has won many awards over the years, but to have our peers in the newspaper industry recognize our editorial pages as outstanding is extremely gratifying," Ford said. "I've always believed the editorial and op-ed pages are the 'heart' of the Cohasset Mariner and a true reflection of a community that cares deeply about the issues."

Contest winners were announced to newspaper publishers, editors, staff and guests at the awards banquet last Saturday at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel.

New England newspapers submitted upwards of 6,000 entries to the 2005 contest, one of the largest regional competitions in the nation. Entries were judged by the American Press Institute, Reston, Va.

CNC/South, parent company of the Mariner, earned a total of 12 awards:

- First place: Cohasset Mariner, best editorial pages
- First place: Marshfield Mariner, editorial supplement (The Coast Guard section).
- First place: Marshfield Mariner, Bert Lane, photo series
- First place: Weymouth News, Cathy Conley, editorial
- Second place: Weymouth News, editorial supplement (Church fire)
- Second place: Weymouth News, Rob Slager, sports column
- Second place: Braintree Forum, editorial pages
- Second place: Scituate Mariner, Jillian Fennimore, reporting on religious issues
- Third place: Hingham Journal, community involvement in the paper
- Third place: Braintree Forum, Cathy Conley, coverage of racial or ethnic issue
- Third place: Norwell Mariner, sports page or section
- Third place: Kingston Mariner, Paula Woodhull, spot news story

Founded in 1950, the New England Press Association, a professional newspaper trade association of more than 525 weekly and daily newspapers, promotes growth and excellence in New England newspapers through technology, networking, education and recognition among its members.

School committee race heating up

Barbara Buckley, both pulled papers this week. In 2004, Buckley headed up the effort to raise money to save three teachers which were being cut from the fiscal 2005 budget.

"As a parent, teacher, and taxpayer, I feel I have a broad perspective, and I look forward to working very hard to make a difference in our schools," she said.

Resident Steven Fusco, 4 Surry Drive has also pulled papers for a school committee seat. Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, has returned her papers, and the signatures have been certified by the Town Clerk, which officially makes her a candidate. While incumbent Pam Wilson had pulled nomination papers, she withdrew from the race last week.

"It just wasn't the right time to leave."

— Rick Flynn, incumbent and candidate

The board of selectmen currently has two interested candidates in Roger Q. Hill of 19A Highland Avenue and Edwin G. "Ted" Carr of 88 S. Main St. The two are vying for selectman Michael Sullivan's seat. Sullivan is not seeking reelection.

Many incumbents have pulled nomination papers indicating their interest in seeking reelection, including planning board member Peter Pratt; sewer commissioner John Beck; and Lisa LoJacono for recreation commission. Other incumbents have already returned their nomination papers and have been certified by the Town Clerk, which has secured them a spot on the election ballot. Peggy Chapman of the board of health was the first to return her papers, followed by water commissioner John McNabb, and assessor Michael C. Patrolia.

There are three seats available on the Board of Library Trustees. Incumbents Patience Towle and Agnes McCann have pulled papers, as has Elizabeth Baker, who would be seeking her first term. Library trustee Carol Riley has indicated she will not seek another term.

There is one open five-year seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority and incumbent John Muncey will not seek reelection. Susan Sardina, 271 South Main St., pulled papers for the position Wednesday.

In order to hold an elected office, a potential candidate must be a registered voter of the town. Please note that a person is not running for office until he or she takes out papers and the Board of Registrars certifies the signatures collected on the nomination papers. Thursday Feb. 16 was the last day to pull papers, and they must be returned by Tuesday, Feb. 21. Town Hall is open until 7 p.m. on Tuesdays, and the Town Clerk's office will accept papers until the end of the day.

Friday, March 10 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting to be held on Saturday, April 1, and for the Annual Town Election to be held on Saturday, April 8.

Minimum school budget could mean painful cuts, Walsh says

Budget powwow slated for Feb. 27

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Information presented at the next school committee meeting won't be pretty, school officials say.

The school committee last week directed Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh to detail exactly what could be lost if the schools have to stick with a 3 percent or $370,331 increase in its proposed fiscal 2007 budget when it needs a budget hike of upwards of a $1 million to move the district forward.

This year Town Manager Bill Griffin plans to present a balanced budget to Town Meeting that would be in effect if an override vote does not pass muster with voters at the polls. Overrides are a two-step process: they usually sail through Town Meeting followed by override ballot votes that can be extremely close.

Last year voters rejected a $400,000 Prop. 2-1/2 override, the lion's share of which would have gone to the schools. Prop. 2-1/2 is the state law that limits the amount a municipality can raise its tax levy in any given year without an override.

The school committee, advisory committee and selectmen had planned to meet last night (Thursday) to further discuss the school budget, but that meeting has been postponed to allow the schools more time to prepare. The joint meeting is tentatively scheduled for Monday, Feb. 27.

Walsh and the school committee have said the schools need at least a 5 percent or $637,109 budget increase "just to open the doors" in the fall that would cover fixed costs, contractual obligations and transportation. They would like the 5 percent increase to be the "balanced budget" figure that Griffin wants. Last Thursday, Walsh presented a scenario about how to reach 5 percent by proposing to use $250,000 in the salary line item in this year's budget to prepay out-of-district tuitions and school supplies for fiscal 2007. In other words, the $250,000 from this year would be used to boost next year's budget increase from the 3 to 5 percent. However, the money would only be available if the teachers' contract is not settled this fiscal year. Walsh and several members of the school committee said numerous times during the meeting that they hoped the contract would be settled.

As the school department deals with the fiscal realities facing the town, a group of parents and concerned citizens have organized to prepare for an override campaign for the operating budget. The Committee to Support Cohasset Schools is registered with the Town Clerk's office as a ballot question committee.

Committee chairman Terry Green of Linden Drive said the group has two main purposes. "First, to educate Cohasset voters on the issues we as a town are facing to support the vast services we all demand, including the schools," he said. "It is imperative voters have the facts to make informed decision. It is our committee's specific job to educate the town on the financial investment necessary to return the schools to the standards we all expect."

Green said one of the first things Walsh did when she came to Cohasset was to ask about 20 citizens and educators to develop a plan to return Cohasset schools "to being the best we can deliver." The result was the Cohasset Educational Strategic Plan, a road map for achieving this goal, which can be viewed at: www.cohassetk12.org.

Green explained the school department's $13.7 million proposed fiscal 2007 budget — representing about an 11-1/2 percent increase would require upwards of a $1 million override — is crucial because it begins to replace the most critical components needed for the school system. Those include addressing class sizes at Deer Hill and Osgood; and adding back math, science, English and foreign language studies that have been cut at the middle-high school.

"It begins to deliver on MCAS standards such as updating the curriculum and adding physics/engineering labs," he said in a recent interview. "Finally it addresses security issues that must be funded. All of these requests are adding back what has been removed over the years due to budgets not keeping pace."

Town finance director Mike Buckley estimates that a $1 million override would equate to a 45-cent impact on the tax rate. For a house valued at $700,000, that would mean an increase of $316 on the property tax bill for the override itself.

At last week's school committee meeting, chairman Jamie Williams said if the override fails, the school committee would have to make serious decisions about restructuring the school system.

"We'd have to put our heads together and find out some way to get the system up and running under Prop. 2-1/2," she said.

Walsh said living within the 3 percent increase without an override would translate into staff layoffs. "Three percent will not do it," she said.

Selectmen weigh in on budget issues

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The joint budget meeting scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 16 (after the Mariner went to press) with the advisory committee, board of selectmen, and school committee has been postponed. It has been tentatively rescheduled for Monday, Feb. 27.

The school committee is expected to come back to the meeting with a budget that reflects only a 3 percent increase over last year's allocation, which is an additional $370,000. The schools have presented a proposed fiscal 2007 budget with a 13 percent increase, which would require an override.

Town Manager Bill Griffin recommended a 3 percent increase for the schools as part of his plans to present a balanced budget, which lives within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, to Town Meeting. The school committee was asked to go through the "3 percent" exercise as a result of the last joint hearing of the three boards on Feb. 2.

The nine member advisory committee had already voted and was unanimously in favor of Griffin's budget process at the time of the first joint meeting. The board of selectmen threw its support Tuesday unanimously behind the process.

However, members of the school committee and superintendent of schools are going through the process reluctantly; they say with the contractual obligations alone, the school department will need a minimum of a 5 percent increase, just to open the doors.

While the board of selectmen agrees with the process, that does not mean it agrees with the figures presented. If there is no override, departments will have live within the limits of the revenue which is brought in from an increase in property taxes of 2-1/2 percent, plus the fees collected from areas such as excise taxes and building permits, new growth, and funding from the state.

Selectmen said through this process, the town will be able to pass a budget that is balanced and would not require going back to Town Meeting in the fall should an override fail, as was the case last year. However, the amount of funding the budget allocates is not enough in many areas, which has led selectmen to begin discussing at least what the town's portion of a potential override might be.

When Griffin drafted his budget, he came up with a list of items which are essentially a "wish list." He asked the board to review the requests and rank them in terms of priority. The board said five areas right off the bat must be funded: police department overtime, fire department overtime, public works overtime, snow and ice expenses, and legal services. These areas have traditionally been underfunded.

"On a scale of one to 10, what is the probability we'll spend all this?" asked Selectman Michael Sullivan of the money Griffin said he would like to see added to those budgets, but which is currently not included. "It's probably about a seven that we'll spend it," said Griffin. Those five categories alone would require adding $100,000 to the budget.

There were 10 other areas which were not included in Griffin's budget, and various members of the board found reasons to argue for almost every one. Other positions include budgeting half the cost of a school resource officer (the other half is in the school budget); a volunteer coordinator for the elder affairs office; a maintenance worker and heavy equipment operator; a part-time custodian for the library; and planning consulting services for the planning board.

With so many needs on the town side, selectmen said they would like to begin discussion of an override as soon as possible with the school committee. If the school department decides it must go for an override, a figure will have to be nailed down that can accommodate the needs of both the town and the schools. If the override fails, the board agreed the cuts which would have to be made would be split by both sides. Griffin said the cuts should be proportional, with a 60/40 percent (schools/town) split.

Deadline here for Cook proposals

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

At the time the Mariner went to press the town had not yet received any bids, but Town Manager Bill Griffin said it is not unusual for developers to wait until the last minute to make a submission.

The Cook Estate is off the back burner.

Bid proposals for the project were due today (Friday) by 10 a.m. At the time the Mariner went to press the town had not yet received any bids, but Town Manager Bill Griffin said it is not unusual for developers to wait until the last minute to make a submission.

The town has had 12 companies or individuals pay the $25 fee to obtain a copy of the Request for Proposals for the Cook Estate project. The RFP outlines the details of what the town would like to see built on the property. The RFP had been available since Jan. 18, and the following companies and individuals showed interest: Accord Development Corp. of Norwell; Bay View Development of Quincy; BR Development of Hingham; Brian Heggie of Cohasset; Bristol Bros. Development of South Weymouth; Cohasset Associates of Cohasset; Deer Hill Partners of Braintree; Fennell Development, Inc., of Boxford; Powers Realty & Development of Cohasset; Russ Development of Boston; Witsop Development Group of Norwell; and Wyman St. Advisors of Waltham.

The board of selectmen tentatively scheduled a meeting for Thursday, Feb. 23 in anticipation of the bids. "Assuming you have more than one (bid), you'll need another meeting," Town Manager Bill Griffin said. Selectmen will have until March 1 to make a designation, and will then have 30 days in which to negotiate a Land Disposition Agreement with the bidder. An LDA is a document which is similar to a purchase and sale agreement.

The Cook project has been in the works since 2003. Originally, Northland Residential was designated as the company to carry out the project. It had plans to build 95 units of mixed-income senior housing on a combined 22-acres of town-owned land and Cook owned land off Sohier Street. A simultaneous closing was planned for the town to purchase the property from the Cook trustees for $4.5 million and the developer to then purchase the land from the town for $5.2 million.

However, wastewater disposal issues on the site made it impossible to carry out 95 units of development with an on-site septic system. Therefore, Northland agreed it would scale back the project to 65 units, for which the wastewater could be accommodated. But with such a substantial change in the project, Town Counsel advised the entire project be put back out to bid.

A second RFP was sent out and the town received three bids. Deer Hill Partners, which bid $4.9 million and proposed building 56 units, was chosen over Cohasset Associates and Northland Residential. Deer Hill's bid was different from the others in that it did not have a rental component. All 56 units, whether affordable or market rate, were ownership housing.

Cohasset Associates, which was the second runner-up, threatened to sue the town if it did not rescind its vote to appoint Deer Hill. The company asserted the town violated the RFP as well as state procurement laws in its award, partially due to the project's lack of a rental component.

The pending lawsuit put a damper on LDA negotiations. The town paid $20,000 to gain a 30-day extension for the project with the Cook trustees. The Cooks then told the town it had until Jan. 15, 2006 to completely finalize and close on the project.

The town sent a letter to Deer Hill Partners asking it for a firm commitment to close on the project by Jan. 15. Deer Hill replied that was not enough time and backed out of the deal. Cohasset Associates, as the second runner-up, was then contacted and it too said that was not enough time and pulled out of the offer.

Selectmen were able to negotiate an extension with the heirs of the estate until March 31, 2007, although an article was in the works for the Special Town Meeting in December to allow the town to purchase the property. However, an article placing a conservation restriction on the town's adjacent parcel of land passed, which took those nine acres out of the development package.

Selectmen will meet Tuesday, Feb. 21, when they will likely announce the number of bids received and the companies which made the submissions. A meeting solely for the purposes of discussing the Cook project has tentatively been set for Thursday, Feb. 23. For more information, please contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Selectmen weigh in on budget issues

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said he thinks the board of selectmen has gone through its budget line by line and has scrutinized and prioritized its needs. He said he would like to see the school committee do the same, and bring that information to the other boards. "We heard a presentation. As a discussion, it was pretty weak," he said about the Feb. 2 joint meeting. He added because there have been so many overrides in Cohasset, officials must be careful about what they ask the town to support, as increasing taxes every year could force some people out of town.

However, Selectman Rob Spofford said on the school's side, roughly 80 percent of the budget is salaries, leaving little discretionary funds. "Is there fat? Are you saying the school committee didn't do its job?" he asked.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said from his point of view, the major issue with the school budget is the fact that it has a 13 percent increase, which accommodates 16 new positions. "Everyone wants more people, but we're carrying zero people on the town side," he said, adding he wants to know the priority of those positions and the reasons why.

The board also discussed what the process would be should an override become necessary. If an override passes at Town Meeting, a special election would be needed to be held no sooner than 30 days after Town Meeting, per town bylaws. Overrides must pass at both Town Meeting and through a subsequent ballot box vote. In the past, the town has presented a budget to town meeting with an override figure included, which has allowed it to be placed on the regular election ballot. This year, Griffin would like the town to approve a balanced budget first, followed by a supplemental budget which includes an override figure. It is unclear how much an override would be or whether it would pass, and therefore the town must wait until after Town Meeting for its firm override figure.

In the future, Spofford said it would make more sense to schedule the regular Town Election for 30 days after Town Meeting to accommodate an override vote if necessary. He said that save the town the cost of an election or roughly $4,000.

Tons of College kids are making Cohasset proud!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ENJOY!

Well, we finally had a storm for this winter and even though it was a bit tricky, it could have been worse.

I hope that even the snow-haters were able to take even a few moments to look outside and the beauty of what the storm brought. The warm weather of this week has melted quite a bit of it but this weekend is supposed to be really cold. Bundle up and watch out for the slippery walkways as the ground will freeze quite a bit.

For all of the families and people who are on vacation this upcoming week, enjoy and bring back some of the warm sunshine and temperatures!

REC FUN NEXT WEEK

Looking for some activities to do with the kids next week right here at home? The Cohasset Recreation Department is sponsoring a Tuesday gym program with Mr. Dykas on Tuesday for ages Pre K- grades 4. On Wednesday, Big Ryan the Storyteller and the Bugworks program will be offering some great offerings and on Thursday, a program for ages 4 and up will be held with Stuff-N-Snuggle bears (think Build-A-well, you know) and arts and crafts program from 9-30 a.m.-noon. For more information, call 781-383-4109. Openings are available in all classes but are filling up fast!

WALK FOR HOSPICE

Here is a wonderful event for families and people of all ages to take part in. The Walk for Hospice of the South Shore is coming up and is so important. The Walk, which takes place March 4, from 7 to 10 a.m. at South Shore Plaza in Braintree, raises money to support Hospice of the South Shore, which provides end-of-life care to hundreds of patients throughout Southeastern Massachusetts, regardless of ability to pay. Every dollar raised by the Walk for Hospice goes to support patient care. Last year Hospice of the South Shore provided more than $250,000 in free care for patients dying from Alzheimer's disease and cancer, as well as heart, kidney, and lung ailments.

Approximately 450 patients lived their remaining weeks to the fullest, in the comfort of their own homes, surrounded by family and friends, with the help of caregivers from Hospice of the South Shore. Hospice of the South Shore also provides care and comfort for family members who are losing their loved one. Hospice caregivers teach families how to comfort and nurture their loved one, and each other. And bereavement counseling is available for family members of every age. Individual walkers, teams, sponsors, and members of the community are encouraged to sign up for the walk at: www.southshorehospital.org. The 15th annual event is a terrific way for families to get together with musical entertainment, a Tae Kwon Doe demonstration, giveaways, raffles, and refreshments.
